THE
POEMS OF LORD HERBERT OF CHERBURY
EDITED
WITH AN INTRODUCTION
BY
JOHN CHURTON COLLINS

LONDON
CHATTO AND WINDUS, PICCADILLY
1881
LONDON:
PRINTED BY STRANGEWAYS AND SONS, TOWER STREET,
UPPER ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.
I INSCRIBE

THIS LITTLE VOLUME

TO MY FRIEND

WILLIAM BAPTISTE SCOONES,

AN

IMPERFECT EXPRESSION

OF

ESTEEM AND AFFECTION.
PREFACE.

Whether the Poems, which are here for the first time presented in a modern dress, be of intrinsic value the reader will soon determine for himself. I have at least brought Herbert before the Court; and I have, I hope, secured him a fair hearing. Henceforth he will not be condemned unheard.

With regard to the text, I have adhered with scrupulous fidelity to that of the original edition; and I have collated the only two copies to which I could obtain access—the copy in the British Museum, and the copy in the Bodleian Library at Oxford—without, however, discovering any variety of readings. My principal difficulty has been with the punctuation, on which, of course, the sense of passages frequently depends; and for this I have often had no guidance from the original, which teems with palpable errors. The spelling has also been carefully revised, and though it has been for the most part modernised, I have thought it well to retain, in some cases, the older forms, so as to preserve the flavour of archaism. Obvious misprints have been silently corrected. In two passages only I have ventured to alter the text, and they both occur in 'The Idea.' In the seventh line the original reads 'bear,' which, as it makes no sense, and breaks the rhyme, I alter into 'bar.' Again, in the last line, 'whence' is substituted for 'when.' And for this reason. Herbert is alluding to the Platonic doctrine of ideas, and it is much more natural to suppose that he would speak of an idea whence the form began than of an idea when the form began. Though he is mistaken in supposing that the Platonic ideas admit of application to particular individuals, he was evidently acquainted with the 'Timæus' and with the 'Republic.'

J. CHURTON COLLINS.

5 King's Bench Walk, Temple.
CONTENTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTION</td>
<td>XV</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ORIGINAL TITLE</td>
<td>XXXV</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ORIGINAL PREFACE</td>
<td>XXXVII</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TO HIS WATCH WHEN HE COULD NOT SLEEP</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DITYY</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A DESCRIPTION</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TO HER FACE</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TO HER BODY</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TO HER MIND</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>UPON COMBING HER HAIR</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DITY IN IMITATION OF THE SPANISH ENTRE</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TANTOQUE EL’AVRIL</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE STATE PROGRESS OF ILL</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SATYRA SECUNDA OF TRAVELLERS FROM PARIS</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘I MUST DEPART, BUT LIKE TO HIS LAST BREATH’</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MADRIGAL</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ANOTHER</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

"b"
TO HIS FRIEND BEN JOHNSON, OF HIS HORACE MADE ENGLISH ......................................................... 28
EPITAPH CÆCIL BOULFER QUÆ POST LANGUESCEN- TEM MORBUM NON SINE INQUIETUDINE SPIRITUS, SC. CONSCIENÆ OBIIT ......................................................... 29
EPITAPH GULI. HERBERT DE SWANSEY QUI SINE PROLE OBIIT, AUG. 1609 ......................................................... 31
IN A GLASS WINDOW FOR INCONSTANCY ......................................................... 32
ELEGY FOR THE PRINCE .................................................................................. 33
EPITAPH OF KING JAMES .................................................................................. 36
A VISION. A LADY COMBING HER HAIR ......................................................... 37
TEARS FLOW NO MORE .................................................................................... 39
DITTY TO THE TUNE OF 'A CHE EL QUANTO MIO' OF PESARINO ......................................................... 40
DITTY ................................................................................................................. 41
EPITAPH OF A STINKING POET ....................................................................... 43
A DITTY TO THE TUNE OF 'COSE FERITE,' MADE BY LORENZO ALLEGRE TO ONE SLEEPING. (To be sung) ......................................................... 44
EPITAPH ON SIR EDWARD SACKVILLE'S-child, WHO DIED IN HIS BIRTH .................................................................................................................. 45
KISSING .............................................................................................................. 46
DITTY ................................................................................................................... 47
ELEGY OVER A TOMB .......................................................................................... 49
EPITAPH ON SIR FRANCIS VERE . . . . 51
TO MRS. DIANA CECYLL . . . . . 52
TO HER EYES . . . . . . 54
TO HER HAIR . . . . . . 56
SONNET OF BLACK BEAUTY . . . . . 58
ANOTHER SONNET TO BLACK IT SELF . . . . 59
THE FIRST MEETING . . . . . . 60
A MERRY RIME, SENT TO THE LADY WROTH UPON MY
  L. OF PEMBROKE'S CHILD, BORN IN THE SPRING 64
THE THOUGHT . . . . . . 65
TO A LADY WHO DID SING EXCELLENTLY . . 67
MELANDER, SUPPOS'D TO LOVE SUSAN, BUT DID
    LOVE ANN . . . . . . 69
ECHO TO A ROCK . . . . . . 70
ECHO IN A CHURCH . . . . . . 72
TO HIS MISTRESS FOR HER TRUE PICTURE . . 74
EPITAPH ON SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, LYING IN ST. PAUL'S
    WITHOUT A MONUMENT, TO BE FASTENED UPON
    THE CHURCH DOOR . . . . . . 80
EPITAPH FOR HIMSELF . . . . . . 81
SONNET . . . . . . 82
TO THE C. OF D. . . . . . . 83
DITTY . . . . . . 84
ELEGY FOR DOCTOR DUNN . . . . . . 86
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>THE BROWN BEAUTY</td>
<td>90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AN ODE UPON A QUESTION MOVED WHETHER LOVE SHOULD CONTINUE FOR EVER</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE GREEN-SICKNESS BEAUTY</td>
<td>99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE GREEN-SICKNESS BEAUTY</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LA GRALLETTA GALLANTE; OR, THE SUN-BURN'D EXOTIQUE BEAUTY</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PLATONICK LOVE</td>
<td>104</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PLATONICK LOVE</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE IDEA MADE OF ALNWICK IN HIS EXPEDITION TO SCOTLAND WITH THE ARMY, 1639</td>
<td>109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PLATONICK LOVE</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A MEDITATION UPON HIS WAX-CANDLE BURNING OUT OCTOBER 14, 1664</td>
<td>119</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IN STATUAM LIGNEAM OVERBURII</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DE C. DE S.</td>
<td>124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EPITAPHIUM IN ANAGRAMMA NOMINIS SUI RED-DOR UT HERB.E</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EPITAPH. IN SE ROM.E FACTUM 1615</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IN TUMULUM DOMINI FRANCISCI VERE</td>
<td>126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IN DIEM NATALITIUM, VIZ. 3 MAR.</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FOR A DYAL</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IN ANSWER TO THE VERSES OF QUIET FOR THE PUCELLE D'ORLEANS, QUASI EXTEMPORE</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Contents</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>---</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IN ANSWER TO TILENUS WHEN I HAD THAT FATAL</td>
<td>129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DEFLUXION IN MY HAND</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DE HUGONE GROTIO, ARCA INCLUSO ET A CARCERE</td>
<td>129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIBERATO</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PRO LAUREATO POETA</td>
<td>130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AD SERENISS. REGEM GUSTAVUM, A.D. 1631</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EURYALE MÆRENNS</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MENSA LUSORIA; OR, A SHOVEL-BOARD TABLE TO MR. MASTER</td>
<td>135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CHARISSIMO, DOCTISSIMO JUCUNDISSIMOQUE JUX-TIM AMICO THOMÆ MASTER</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INTRODUCTION.

LORD HERBERT of Cherbury is one of the most interesting, and in many respects one of the most essentially original characters, in our Literary History. At once a philosopher and a politician, a man of the world and a man of letters, it was his lot to flourish at a crisis of no ordinary importance in philosophy, in politics, in literature. His youth was passed in the world of Hooker, Sydney, and Spenser. Before he died Hobbes had written the Elementa Philosophica de Civie, Barclay had published his Argenis, and Butler was collecting materials for Hudibras. He was a child of eight when Elizabeth addressed the soldiers at Tilbury Fort, and he lived to see Charles the First betrayed by the Scots to the English Commissioners. He was the friend of Donne and Ben Jonson; he was the correspondent of Grotius and Gaja. He thus stood midway between two great eras, moving in both. In temper he belonged to the era of the Renaissance, in intellect he belonged to the era of Des Cartes and Hobbes. His own services to literature were important. His De Veritate, if it did not do much for the advancement of metaphysical philosophy, was the work of a fearless, vigorous, and independent thinker; a work which exercised considerable influence on the progress of Free Enquiry, and was the first attempt made, in this country at least, to reduce Deism to a system. His Life and Reign of Henry VIII. is an admirable piece of historical composition. His Expeditio Buckinghani Ducis in Ream Insulam is the best account we have of that unhappy adventure; and his Autobiography is, if ever autobiography was, a treasure for all time.

Thus interesting by his surroundings, thus important in himself, we are the more attracted towards him because of the fulness with which we are acquainted with the incidents of his personal history. We know him as we know no other man of that age. Never since Jerome Cardan laid bare for the world's inspection the innermost secrets of his being, never since Cellini told the story of his strange vicissitudes, never since Montaigne took Europe into his confidence, had such a record as Herbert has left us been committed to paper. Whether he intended his singular confessions for publication may well be doubted. He tells us himself that they were written for the instruction of his descendents, and to enable him to review his past career, that he might reform what was amiss if such reformation were possible, that he might comfort himself with the memory of whatever virtuous actions he might have done, and that he might make his peace with God. In the course of this review he not only narrates the adventures which he had encountered on his way through life, but he enters into minute particulars relating to his writings and speculations—his struggles with his passions, his struggles with his reason: he gives us his opinions on education, on the conduct of life, on religion. And he is to all appearance unreserved. His frailties are not concealed, and they are many; but we feel that he has, on the whole, gained rather than lost by a scrutiny which few, indeed, of our erring race could court with impunity. Nor is this all. It is the portrait of a man with features eminently striking and peculiar, whose ways were never the ways of common men, whose thoughts were not the thoughts either of his predecessors or contemporaries. Nothing, therefore, which Herbert has left us can be without importance; for, whatever be its intrinsic value, it is the product of an original mind developing itself under exceptionally interesting historical conditions.

The world has long done justice to his prose writings. It is the object of the present volume to vindicate his title to a place among English poets. I have certainly no wish to be numbered among those gentlemen whose indiscriminating industry continues year after year to load our libraries with treasures better hidden. I have no wish to rob Oblivion of its legitimate prey. Some of Lord Herbert's poems are, I freely admit, not worth resuscitation, but many of them, or portions at least of many of them, seem to me authentic poetry. In almost all of them we find originality and vigour, however fantastic the conception, however rough the execution. But were their merits even less than they are, no cultivated man could regard them with indifference. The name of their writer would be a sufficient passport to indulgent attention. We treasure the verses of the authors of the Nicomachean Ethics, and of the Novum Organon, though Aristotle has no claim to a place among the Pleiad, or Bacon to a place beside Jonson or Donne.

In my estimate of Lord Herbert's poems I have hitherto stood alone. His biographers and critics are unanimous in ignoring or condemning them. Antony Wood passés them by without comment. Horace Walpole merely mentions them in his Catalogue of Herbert's Works. Neither Grainger nor the author of the life in the Biographie Universelle have anything to say for them. Park, in a note on Walpole's Life of Herbert, coldly speaks of 'Lord Herbert's scarce volume of metaphysical love verses, ingenious but unnatural, platonic in sentiment, but frequently gross in expression, and marked by an eccentricity which pervaded the life and character of their author;' and these remarks have been greedily copied into successive editions of bibliographic manuals, reprints, and the like. Ellis, in his Specimens of English Poetry, is still less favourable in his verdict, boldly observing that young Herbert 'showed more piety than taste in publishing his father's poems.' The author of an article on the Autobiography in the Retrospective Review contents himself with remarking that Lord Herbert is often 'both rugged and obscure in his verses,' and 'was much more fitted to wield the sword than the lyre.' They have no place in the Selections of Headley. Even Campbell, who can find a niche for Heminge and Picke, has no corner for Herbert. M. Charles de Rémusat, in his interesting and valuable treatise, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, sa Vie et ses Œuvres, expresses similar opinions: 'Ses poésies anglaises, publiées par son second fils, sont d'un genre moins ferieux'—(he has been speaking, and speaking deprecatingly, of Herbert's Latin poems)—'Quelques unes font ingénieuses, la pluspart obscures; l'amour en est le sujet ordinaire, un amour platonique, exprimé cependant avec plus de recherche que délicatesse.' It is curious that they should have escaped the notice of Sir Egerton Brydges, who has not, so far as I can discover, made any allusion to them. And this is the more remarkable, as he was particularly interested in the history of the Herbert family, and was the first editor of the poems of William Herbert, third Earl of Pembroke. When he observed in the preface to his reprint of the Earl's poems that 'to suffer them to lie longer in oblivion would be to defraud an illustrious family of its greatest ornaments,' he made a remark which would be far more applicable to the present volume. Whatever opinion may be formed of Lord Herbert's merits as a poet, there can be no question as to his superiority to his kinsman.

It is strange that in his Autobiography Lord Herbert makes no mention of his Poems, the existence of which seems not to have been suspected by any of his distinguished contemporaries. They were evidently jotted down in moments of leisure, as occasion offered. Some of them were the work of his youth, some of his middle age; the last was written four years before his death. This we gather from the dates prefixed to many of them, the earliest date being August 1608, the latest October 1664. The biographers assure us that many of these poems had appeared in print during Herbert's lifetime, and are to be found in the poetical collections of the period. For these collections I have searched in vain. I doubt, I must own, the truth of the statement, and suspect that it has been loosely copied, without any attempt to ascertain its correctness, from Antony Wood; and I am the more inclined to believe this because they have faithfully repeated one gross blunder of Wood's—a blunder which would at once have been rectified by consulting the work to which Wood refers. It is this, and it is significant: In the third volume of his Athenae Oxonienses (edition Bliss, p. 242) Wood says: 'Other of Lord Herbert’s poems I have seen in the books of other authors occasionally written, particularly in that of Joshua Sylvestor, entitled Lacrymae Lacrymarum, 1613.' This assertion is repeated by Walpole, by Sir Walter Scott in the Preliminary Memoir to Lord Herbert’s Autobiography, published at Edinburgh in 1809, by the editor of Murray’s reprint of the Life, and by all the bibliographers. Now there is not a line of Lord Herbert’s to be found in Sylvestor’s work. What Wood was thinking of was no doubt the Elegy for the Prince (see Poems, page 33), which certainly was published during Herbert’s lifetime, but which appeared, not in Sylvestor’s Lacrymae Lacrymarum, but in a collection entitled Sundry Funeral Elegies on the Untimely Death of the Most Excellent Prince Henry, composed by several hands, 1613. However this may be, the poems made their appearance in a collected form in 1665, nearly seventeen years after Herbert’s death; and were, as we learn from the Preface, given to the world by Henry Herbert, his youngest son. Of these poems there appears to have been only one edition. The volume is now extremely rare; indeed, it is one of the rarest known to bibliographers.
The reader will at once discover that Herbert belongs, like his brother, to that school of poets whose characteristics have been so admirably analysed by Johnson—the Metaphysical or Phantastie School. This singular sect first appeared during the latter years of Elizabeth's reign. Their origin is popularly ascribed to Dr. Donne, though it would in truth be more correct to say that in the poetry of Donne their peculiarities of sentiment and expression are most conspicuously illustrated. They owed their origin, indeed, not to the influence of Donne, but to the spirit of the age. In all eras of great creative energy poetry passes necessarily through two stages: in the first stage, imagination predominates; in the second, reflection. In the first stage, men feel more than they think; in the second, they think more than they feel. If a literature run its natural course, we may predict with absolute certainty that mere rhetoric will usurp the place of the eloquent language of the passions, that fancy will be substituted for imagination, and that there will cease to be any necessary correspondence between the emotions and the intellect. This stage was not completely attained till the age of Cowley. In the poetry of Donne we find the transition between the two stages marked with singular precision. Some of his poems remind us of the richest and freshest work of the Elizabethan age; in many of them he out-Cowleys Cowley himself. But his work was not the work, in any sense, of a creator. He contributed no new elements, either to thought or to diction. What he did was to unite the vicious peculiarities of others, to indulge habitually in what they indulged in only occasionally. He was not, for example, the first to substitute philosophical reflection for poetic feeling, as his contemporaries, Samuel Daniel, Sir John Davies, and Fulke Greville, were simultaneously engaged in doing the same thing. He was not the first to indulge in abuse of wit, in fanciful speculations, in extravagant imagery, or in grotesque eccentricities of expression. But, in addition to uniting these vices, he carried them further than any of his predecessors or contemporaries had done, and, aided by the spirit of the age, he succeeded in making them popular. It would not, perhaps, be saying too much to say that no single author contributed more to the foundation of the Metaphysical School than Joshua Sylvester, whose translation of Du Bartas preceded the 'metaphysical' poems of Donne, and was probably as favourite a work with Donne as it certainly was with most of the young poets of that age. The style of Donne is, however, marked by certain distinctive peculiarities which no intelligent critic would be likely to mistake, and his influence on contemporary poetry was unquestionably considerable. Lord Herbert appears to have been the earliest of his disciples. Indeed, most of the poems in Herbert's collection in which the influence of Donne is most perceptible, had been written, as the dates show, long before the poems of Donne were given to the world. But he was, we know, personally acquainted with Donne, and Donne, like many of the poets of that age, was in the habit of circulating copies of his poems among private friends.* His acquaintance with his master commenced, no doubt, while he was still a student at University College; for we learn from Walton's Life of George Herbert that when Mrs. Herbert was living with her son Edward at Oxford Donne arrived there on a visit, and became, during her residence at Oxford, one of her most valued friends and advisers. His beautiful poem entitled the Autumnal was written in honour of Mrs. Herbert. As Herbert was then a youth of eighteen, and Donne a man of upwards of forty, it is not unreasonable to suppose that Donne assisted both in moulding the youth's tastes and in directing his studies.

Where Herbert most reminds us of Donne is not

* Dr. Grosart, in his laborious and instructive account of Donne and his writings, tells us that several of Donne's descriptive and satirical poems were in circulation among friends certainly before 1614, and that some of his lyrics were in circulation before 1613. (See his remarks on his edition of Donne, vol. ii., Essay on the Life and Writings of Donne, pp. xxxi. and xxxii.)
so much in his lyrics as in his poems written in the heroic measures; in the two satires, for example, in the verses 'To his Mistrefl for her True Picture,' in the elegy on Donne himself. The poem also entitled 'The Idea' is very much in his friend's vein, as well as written in a measure which Donne perhaps invented, and which was certainly a favourite with him. The numerous poems dedicated to the praise of dark beauty were perhaps suggested by Donne's verses To a Lady of Dark Complexion. In the two poems on Platonic Love we may also discern the presence of the master. It would, of course, be absurd to assert that the lyric poetry of Donne had no influence on that of Herbert, but its influence was far less considerable than it would at first sight appear to be. Herbert's rhythm is his own. Where it is musical its music is not the music of the older poet, where its note is harsh and dissonant it is no echo of the discords of that unequal and most capricious finger. Many of Donne's favourite measures he has not employed; some of his own measures, the measures in which he has been most successful, have no prototype in Donne's poems. What he owes in lyric poetry to the leader of the Metaphysical School is to be found, so far as form is concerned, rather in what Donne suggested than in what he directly taught. In spirit he owed, it must be allowed, much. From Donne he learned to sport with extravagant fancies, to substitute the language of the schools for the language of the heart, to think like the author of the Enneads and to write like the author of Euphues. He has, however, had the good taste to avoid the groser faults of his master. He never indulges in preposterous absurdities; he never, if we except one couplet, clothes mysticism in motley.

Herbert's poems are of too miscellaneous a character to be exactly classified. They may be roughly divided into Sonnets, Elegies, Epitaphs, Satires, Miscellaneous Lyrics, and Occasional Pieces. However unequal these compositions may be in point of execution, there are two things which the reader of Herbert may, in the more ambitious poems at least, generally promise himself—originality and vigour. The Sonnets need not detain us long. The one 'To his Watch' (page 1) is well expressed. The style is in happy unison with the sentiment, and the final clause is solemn and impressive. The last verse of the sonnet 'To her Face' (page 6),

'Sure Adam smn'd not in that spotless face," though somewhat obscure, is a really fine line. In the sonnet written near Merlou Castle (page 12), the couplet describing the groves on the banks of the stream,

'Embroidering through each glade
An airy silver and a funny gold,' prove that Herbert had the eye of a poet. The most striking of them is the address 'To Black Itself' (page 59), which is particularly interesting, because it contains the germ of part at least of the idea which was afterwards so magnificently embodied by Blanco White in his famous sonnet. White was most likely immediately indebted to Sir Thomas Browne, but Browne was no doubt well acquainted with Herbert and his writings. With regard to his Elegies—I am not, of course, including among them the lyric elegy on page 49—I shall perhaps consult his fame best by passing them by without comment. Two or three verses in the 'Elegy on the Prince' will no doubt please and strike, but there praise must end, even from an editor. Of the Epitaphs, the most original is the 'Epitaph upon Himself' (page 81), the most grotesque that on Cecilia Boulfer (page 29), the most eloquent and pleasing that on William Herbert of Swansey (page 31). The two satires are of very unequal merit. The second, page 20, would disgrace Taylor the Water Poet. The first, 'The State Progress of Ill,' though intolerably harsh and barbarous in style, contains some interesting remarks. Of the Occasional Pieces, those which most nearly resembled the poems of which we have been speaking are the verses entitled 'To her Mind' (page 8), and 'To his Mistress for her True Picture' (page 74), both being in the heroic couplet, and both being in the same contemplative vein. To those who are fond of tracing resemblances between the works of men of genius who are separated by many years from each other, it will be interesting to observe how closely Herbert sometimes reminds us of Mr. Browning. In the verses, for example, 'To her Mind,' there is a passage which might excusably be mistaken for the work of the great philosophical poet of our day:

'Thus ends my Love, but this doth grieve me most
That so it ends; but that ends too; this yet,
Beside the wishes, hopes and time I loft,
Troubles my mind awhile, that I am set
Free, worse than deny'd: I can neither boast
Choice nor success, as my case is, nor get
Pardon from myself, that I loved not
A better mistress, or her worse. This debt
Only's her due, still that she be forgot
Ere chang'd, left I love none; this done, the taint
Of foul inconstancy is cleared at last
In me; there only refts but to unpaint
Her form in my mind, that so disposseff'd,
It be a temple, but without a saint.'

—the same elliptical mode of expression, the same intermixture of sentiment and logic, the same curious refinements of speculative meditation. The verses 'To his Mistress for her True Picture' will not find, and they certainly do not deserve, many admirers. It may be questioned whether Platonism has ever clothed itself in such grotesque language as in the last couplet of this strange poem:

‘Hear from my body’s prison this my call,
Who from my mouth-grate and eye-window bawl.’

The lyric pieces are of very unequal merit. But in making out a case for Herbert my business is only with his best work; and if we judge him by his best work, he is certainly entitled to no mean place among the lyrist's of the Metaphysical School. His music is, it must be owned, full of discords—his verses will sometimes not even scan, and yet he possesses not only a fine ear for rhythmic effect, but his rhythm is of great compass and variety. Occasionally his verse has a weight, a fullness and dignity, not unworthy of Dryden; for example, two stanzas like these (pages 10 and 11):

‘Nay, thou art greater, too! More destiny
Depends on thee than on her influence.
No hair thy fatal hand doth now dispense
But to some one a thread of life must be."

* * * * * * *

‘But stay! methinks new beauties do arise
While she withdraws these glories which were spread.
Wonder of Beauties! set thy radiant head,
And strike out Day from thy yet fairer eyes.’
Nor can we refuse the gift of lyric melody to the writer of a stanza like this:

‘Then think each minute that you lose a day.
The longest youth is short,
The shortest age is long: Time flies away,
And makes us but his sport,
And that which is not Youth’s is Age’s prey.’

Or to the writer of such poems as we find on page 56, and on page 46.

But Herbert’s greatest metrical triumph is that he was the first to discover the harmony of that stanza with which the most celebrated poet of our own day has familiarised us. The glory of having invented it belongs indeed to another, but the glory of having passed it almost perfect into Mr. Tennyson’s hands belongs unquestionably to Herbert. And it is due also to Herbert to say that he not only revealed its sweetness and beauty, but that he anticipated some of its most exquisite effects and variations. Take, for example, the following stanza, where the pause occurs at the end of the second line:

‘For where affection once is shown,
No longer can the World beguile;
Who sees his penance all the while
He holds a torch to make her known.’—Ditty, page 42.
Or these lines, where the pause is made at the end of the first line:

‘Else should our souls in vain elect,
And vainer yet were Heaven’s laws
When to an everlafting caufe
They give a perifhing effect.’—Page 96.

Or again:

‘Nay, I proteft; though Death with his
Worft counfel fhould divide us here;’—Page 94.

where the pause occurs at the end of the fourth syllable. An analytical examination of the metre of In Memoriam will shew that on alternations and interchanges of those pauses the poet has not only relied for varying his harmony, but for producing some of his most pleasing effects. Indeed, in Herbert’s two poems we find anticipated the exact cadence, the exact note of the modern poet. I question, for example, whether the nicest ear could distinguish lines like these from the Laureate’s:

‘Were not our souls immortal made,
Our equal loves can make them such.’

‘As one another’s mystery,
Each fhall be both, yet both but one.’

‘Who sees his penance all the while
He holds a torch to make her known.’

Other points of resemblance, into which there is no necessity for entering here, can scarcely fail to suggest themselves to thoughtful readers. It is curious that we should be able to point—and to point, I venture to think, without at all straining analogy—to two poems of this forgotten poet which recall so exactly the work of the author of In Memoriam and the work of the author of Sordello. If the circumstance prove little else, it proves at least the versatility of Herbert's powers.

The best of Herbert's lyrics is the poem of which we have just been speaking—the 'Ode upon a Question moved whether Love should Continue for Ever.' It is a little prolix, and it is occasionally obscure; but the finest stanzas in it are exquisitely beautiful. Next would come, in the estimation of many perhaps, the verses 'Upon combing her Hair' (page 10), which are singularly vigorous and picturesque. We feel, however, that their sounding rhetoric is somewhat out of place—the style is too elevated for the theme, a common fault with poets of the second order. Among other lyrics of a serious cast the 'Elegy over a Tomb' (page 49) and the verses 'To her Hair' (page 56) deserve mention. Of the lighter lyrics the 'Ditty in Imitation of the Spanish' will probably be read with much pleasure. The Platonic Love poems, though not without interest and even merit, cannot be said to hold a very high rank among poems of the class to which they belong. With one exception—the ode on page 92, to which I have already referred—they are little calculated either to please or to strike. They have all the frigidity and pedantic ingenuity of Petrarch and Bembo without those beauties of expression which still attract us in the Sonnetti and Canzoni. 'The Idea' is, however, well worth attentive perusal. Rarely have the doctrines of pure Platonism been more skilfully applied, rarely have philosophy and sentiment been more ingeniously blended.

Herbert’s most conspicuous defects, both in these and in his other poems, are want of finish and excessive obscurity. He seldom does justice to his conceptions. He had evidently no love for the labour of the file, and he has paid, like Donne and Fulke Greville, the just penalty for his carelessness.

The Latin poems of Herbert are scarcely likely to find favour in the eyes of modern scholars. Their diction is, as a rule, involved and obscure; they teem with forced and unclassical expressions. His hendecasyllabics are intolerably harsh, and violate almost every metrical canon. His Elegiacs are not more successful; indeed, the only tolerable copy among the poemata are the verses on a Dial, for the epigrams are below contempt. In his hexameters he succeeds better. The 'Mensa Lusoria' is ingenious and not inelegant, and the 'Pro Laureato Poeta,' though unnecessarily obscure, is, like the epistle to Gustavus, extremely spirited. But even at his best he cannot for an instant be compared with his contemporaries, Owen, Milton, Cowley, or May, who wrote Latin, nor indeed with the purity of the poets of the Italian Renaissance, but with wonderful fluency and vigour. Befide the Latin poems appearing in this volume, Herbert was the author of three others, entitled respectively 'Hæredibus ac Nepotibus suis Praecepta,' which is in elegiacs, 'De Vitâ Humanâ Philosophica Disquisitio,' and 'De Vitâ Cœlesti ex ejusdem principiis Conjectura,' which are in hexameters. They are to be found among certain tracts appended to the De Causis Errorum, printed in 1645.* The two last appear also in the Autobiography, and they are by far the best. But as these poems are not likely to interest readers in our day, and possess little or no value in themselves, we have refrained from adding them, even by way of appendix, to the present volume.

* The exact title of the volume is, De Causis Errorum, una cum tractatu De Religione Laici et Appendix ad Sacrandos, necnon quibusdam poetamibus. Londini, 1645 (Walpole says, erroneously, 1647).
OCCASIONAL VERSES

OF EDWARD LORD HERBERT BARON OF CHERBURY AND CASTLE-ISLAND.

Deceased in August 1648.

LONDON:
Printed by T. R. for THOMAS DRING,
At The George in Fleet Street, near Clifford's Inn.
1665.
To the

RIGHT HON. EDWARD LORD HERBERT,
BARON OF CHERBERY IN ENGLAND AND CASTLE ISLAND IN IRELAND.

My Lord,

This Collection of some of the scattered Copies of Verses, composed in various and perplexed times, by Edward Lord Herbert, your late Grandfather, belongs of double right to your Lordship, as Heir and Executor; and had it been in his power to have bequeathed his Learning by Will, as his Library and Personal Estate, it may be presumed he would have given it to you as the best Legacy. But Learning being not of our Gift, though of our Acquisition, nor of the Paraphernalia of a Lady's Chamber, nor of the casual and fortunate Goods of the World, it must be acknowledged of a transcendence beyond natural things, and a beam of the Divinity. For by the Powers of Knowledge Men are not only distinguished from Men, but carried above the reach of ordinary Persons, to give Reasons even of their Belief—not that men believe because they know, but know because they believe. Faith must precede Knowledge; and yet men are not bound to accept matters of Religion, though Religion be the object and employment of faith, not of reasoning merely without Reason and probable Inducements.

That the learned Centuries are past, and Learning in declension, is too great a truth, which may introduce Atheisme with Ignorance; for as Ignorance is the Mother of Devotion amongst the Papists, so 'tis the Mother of Atheisme amongst the Ignorant.

The great and most dangerous design of our Church and National Enemies, is to make us out of Love with Learning, as a Mechanick thing and beneath the Spirits of the Nobility and of Princes: whereas nothing improves and enlightens the understandings of great Persons but Learning, and not only ennobles them far above their birth, but enables them to impose on others, and to give rather than take advice. The Learned, Generous, and Vertuous Person needs no
Ancestors. And what can so properly be call'd ours as what is of our purchase?

‘Gentiles agunt sub nomine Christiano’ was an old Reproach upon the Primitive Christians; and now Men out-aft the Gentiles.

The Goods of this life are all Hydropick, Quo plus bibuntur, plus suituntur. Men are the drier for drinking and the poorer for covetousness: no satiety, no fulness, but in spiritual things. The way of Vertue appeared to the Heathen to be the only way to Happiness, and yet they knew not many vertues which are the Glory of Christianity, as Humility, Denying of our selves, Taking up the Cross, forgiving and loving our Enemies, which the Heathen took for follies rather than Vertues.

As for Poetry, it bears date before Prose, and was of so great authority with the common People and the wiser sort of antiquity, that it was in veneration with their Sacred Writ and Records, from which they derived their divinity and belief concerning their Gods, and that their Poets, as Orpheus, Linus, and Musæus, were descended of the Gods, and divinely inspired, from the extraordinary Motions of their Minds, and from the Relations of strange Visions, Raptures, and Apparitions.

My Lord, excuse the liberty of this Dedication, and believe me,

Your Lordship's Uncle
and Humble Servant,

HENRY HERBERT.

March 18th, 1664.
OCCASIONAL VERSES.

TO HIS WATCH
WHEN HE COULD NOT SLEEP.

UNCESSANT Minutes, whilst you move you tell
   The time that tells our life, which, though it run
   Never so fast or far, your new begun
   Short steps shall overtake; for though life well

May escape his own Account, it shall not yours.
   You are Death's Auditors, that both divide
   And sum what ere that life inspir'd endures
   Past a beginning, and through you we bide

The doom of Fate, whose unrecall'd Decree
   You date, bring, execute; making what's new
   Ill, and good old, for as we die in you,
   You die in Time, Time in Eternity.
DITTY.

DEEP Sighs, Records of my unpitied Grief,
Memorials of my true though hopeless Love,
Keep time with my sad thoughts, till wish'd Relief
My long despairs for vain and careless prove.
Yet if such hap never to you befall,
I give you leave, break time, break heart, and all.

Lord, thus I sin, repent, and sin again,
As if Repentance only were in me
Leave for new Sin; thus do I entertain
My short time, and Thy Grace, abusing Thee
And Thy long suffering, which, though it be
Ne'er overcome by Sin, yet were in vain
If tempted oft: thus we our Errors see

Before our Punishment, and so remain
Without Excuse: and, Lord, in them 'tis true
Thy Laws are just; but why dost Thou distress
Ought else for life save life? That is Thy due,
The rest Thou mak'st us owe, and may't to us
As well forgive. But, oh! my sins renew,
Whilst I do talk with my Creator thus.
A DESCRIPTION.

* SING her worth and praisés, I, Of whom a Poet cannot lie. The little World the Great shall blaze, Sea, Earth, her Body; Heaven, her Face, Her Hair, Sunbeams, whose every part Lightens, inflames each Lover's Heart, That thus you prove the †Axiom true, Whilst the Sun helped Nature in you. Her Front, the white and azure sky In Light and Glory raised high, Being o'recast by a cloudy frown, All Hearts and Eyes dejecteth down; Her each Brow, a celestial Bow Which through this Sky her Light doth shew, Which doubled, if it strange appear The Sun's likewise is doubled there; Her either Cheek, a blushing Morn, Which, on the Wings of Beauty born, Doth never set, but only fair Shineth exalted in her hair;

* μικρόκοσμος μακροκόσμος. † Sol et homo generant hominem.
A Description.

Within her Mouth Heaven's Heav'n reside;
Her words the souls there Glorifi'd;
Her Noife, th'Æquator of this Globe,
Where Nakedness, Beauty's best Robe,
Presents a form all Hearts to win.
Last Nature made that Dainty Chin,
Which that it might in every fashion
Answer the rest, a Constellation
Like to a Desk, She there did place
To write the Wonders of her Face.
In this Cælestial Frontispiece,
Where Happiness eternal lies,
First arranged stand three Senses,—
This Heaven's Intelligences,
Whose several Motions sweet combined
Come from the first Mover, her Mind.
The weight of this Harmonique Sphere
The Atlas of her Neck doth bear,
Whose favours Day to Us imparts
When Frowns make Night in Lovers' Hearts.
Two foaming Billows are her Breasts,
That carry rais'd upon their Crests
The Tyrian Fish: More white's their Foam
Then that whence Venus once did come.
Here take her by the Hand, my Muse,
With that Sweet Foe, to make my Truce.
To compact Manna best compar’d,
Whose dewy inside’s not full hard.
Her Waist’s an enverf’d Pyramis
Upon whose Cone Love’s Trophy is.
Her Belly is that Magazine
At whose peep Nature did resign
That precious Mould by which alone
There can be framed such a One:
At th’ entrance of which hidden Treasure,
Happy making above measure,
Two Alabaster Pillars stand,
To warn all passage from that Land,
At foot whereof engraved is
The sad Non Ultra of Man’s Bliss.
The back of this most precious Frame
Holds up in Majesty the Same;
Where to make Music to all Hearts
Love bound the descant of her parts.
Though all this Beauty’s Temple be
There’s known within no Deity
Save Virtues shrin’d within her Will.
As I began, so say I still,
I sing her Worth and Praifes, I,
Of whom a Poet cannot lie.
TO HER FACE.

FATAL Aspect! that hast an influence
   More powerful far than those Immortal Fires
That but incline the Will and move the Sense
Which thou alone constrainst, kindling desires
Of such a holy force, as more inspires
The Soul with Knowledge, than Experience
Or Revelation can do with all
Their borrow'd helps: Sacred Astonishment
Sits on thy Brow, threat'ning a sudden fall
To all those Thoughts that are not lowly sent
In wonder and amaze, dazzling that Eye
Which on those Mysteries doth rudely gaze.
Vow'd only unto Love's Divinity:
Sure Adam finn'd not in that spotless Face.
REGARDFUL Presence! whose fix'd Majesty
Darts Admiration on the gazing Look
That brings it not: State fits enthron'd in thee,
Divulging forth her Laws in the fair Book
Of thy Commandments, which none mistook
That ever humbly came therein to see
Their own unworthiness. Oh, how can I
Enough admire that Symmetry, express'd
In new Proportions, which doth give the Lie
To that Arithmetic which hath profest
All Numbers to be Hers? Thy Harmony
Comes from the Spheres, and there doth prove
Strange measures, so well grac'd, as Majesty
Itself like thee would rest, like thee would move.
TO HER MIND.

EXALTED Mind! Whose character doth bear
The first idea of Perfection, whence
Adam's came, and stands so. How can'tt appear
In words that only tell what here-
Tofore hath been? Thou need'ft as deep a sense
As Prophecy, since there's no difference
In telling what thou art and what shalt be.
Then pardon me that Rapture do profess
At thy outside, that want for what I see
Description of. Here amaz'd I cease
Thus——
Yet grant one question and no more, crav'd under
Thy gracious leave: How, if thou wouldst express
Thyself to us, thou shouldst be still a wonder?

Thus ends my Love, but this doth grieve me most
That so it ends; but that ends too; this yet,
Besides the Wishes, hopes, and time I lost,
Troubles my mind awhile, that I am set
To her Mind.

Free, worse than denied: I can neither boast
Choice nor Success as my Case is, nor get
Pardon from myself, that I loved not
A better Mistress, or her worse. This Debt
Only's her due, still that she be forgot
Ere chang'd, left I love none: this done, the taint
Of soul Inconstancy is clear'd at least.
In me, there only rests but to unpaint
Her form in my mind, that so dispos'd,
It be a Temple, but without a Saint.
UPON COMBING HER HAIR.

BREAKING from under that thy cloudy Veil
Open and shine yet more; shine out more clear,
Thou glorious golden-beam-darting hair,
Even till my wonder-stricken senses fail.

Shoot out in light, and shine those Rays on far,
Thou much more fair than is the Queen of Love,
When she doth comb her in her Sphere above,
And from a Planet turns a Blazing Star.

Nay, thou art greater, too! More destiny
Depends on thee than on her influence.
No hair thy fatal hand doth now dispense,
But to some one a thread of life must be.

While gracious unto me thou both dost sunder
Those glories which, if they united were,
Might have amazed sense, and shew'st each hair
Which, if alone, had been too great a wonder.
Upon Combing her Hair.

And now spread in their goodly length, 'tis appears
No creature which the earth might call her own;
But rather one that, in her gliding down,
Heav'n's beams did crown, to shew us she was theirs.

And come from thence, how can they fear Time's rage,
Which in his power else on earth most strange,
Such golden treasure doth to Silver change
By that improper Alchemy of Age?

But stay! methinks new Beauties do arise
While she withdraws these Glories which were spread:
Wonder of Beauties! set thy radiant head,
And strike out Day from thy yet fairer eyes.

I I
DITTY INIMITATION OF THE SPANISH
ENTRE TANTOQUE EL’AVRIL.

NOW that the April of your youth adorns
The garden of your face,
Now that for you each knowing Lover mourns,
And all seek to your grace,
Do not repay affection with scorns.

What though you may a matchless Beauty vaunt,
And all that Hearts can move
By such a power that seemeth to enchant,
Yet, without help of Love,
Beauty no pleasure to itself can grant.

Then think each minute that you lose a day.
The longest youth is short,
The shortest Age is long; Time flies away,
And makes us but his sport,
And that which is not Youth’s is Age’s prey.
Ditty.

See but the bravest Horse that prideth most,
   Though he escaped the War,
Either from Master to the Man, is lost,
   Or turned unto the Car;
Or else must die with being ridden Post.

Then lose not Beauty, Lovers, Time, and all,
   Too late your fault you see,
When that in vain you would these days recall.
   Nor can you virtuous be,
When without these you have not wherewithal.
THE STATE-PROGRESS OF ILL.

I say, 'tis hard to write Satires. Though Ill
   Great'ned in his long course, and swelling still,
Be now like to a Deluge, yet, as Nile,
   'Tis doubtful in his original. This while
We may thus much on either part presume,
   That what so universal are, must come
From causes great and far. Now in this State
Of things, which is least like good, Men hate,
Since 'twill be the least fin. I do see
Some ill required, that one poison might free
The other; so states, to their Greatness, find
No faults required but their own, and bind
The rest. And though this be mysteriously, still,
   Why should we not imagine how this Ill
Did come at first, how't keeps his greatness here,
When 'tis disguif'd, and when it doth appear.
This Ill, having some attributes of God
As to have made it self and bear the rod
Of all our punishments, as it seems, came

I4
The State-Progres of Ill.

Into the World to rule it, and to tame
The pride of Goodness; and though his Reign
Great in the hearts of men he doth maintain
By love, not right, he yet the tyrant here
(Though it be him we love and God we fear),
Pretence yet wants not, that it was before
Some part of Godhead, as Mercy, that store
For Souls grown Bankrupt, their first stock of Grace,
And that which the sinner of the last place
Shall number out, unless th’ Higheft will shew
Some power not yet reveal’d to Man below.

But that I may proceed, and so go on
To trace Ill in his first progression,
And through his Secret’st ways, and where that he Had left his nakedness as well as we,
And did appear himself,

I note that in
The yet infant world how
Mischief and sin,

His Agents here on earth, and easy known,
Are now concealed Intelligencers grown:
For since that as a Guard th’ Higheft at once
Put Fear t’attend their private actions,
And Shame their publik, other means being fail’d,
Mischief under doing of Good was veil’d,
The State-Progres of Ill.

And Sin, of Pleasure; though in this disguise
They only hide themselves from mortal eyes.
Sins, those that both com- and o-mitted be,
Once hot and cold, but in a third degree
Are now such poisons, that though they may lurk
In secret parts awhile, yet they will work
Though after death; nor ever come alone,
But sudden-fruitful multiply ere done.
While in this monstrous birth they only die
Whom we confess, those live which we deny.
Mischiefs, like fatal Constellations,
Appear unto the ignorant at once
In glory and in hurt, while th'unseen part
Of the great cause may be perchance the Art
Of th' Ill and hiding it, which that I may
Ev'n in his first original display,
And beft example, sure amongst Kings, he,
Who first wanted succeions to be,
A Tyrant was, wise enough to have chose
An honest man for King, which should dispose
Those beasts, which being so tame, yet otherwise
As it seems, could not herd; And with advise
Somewhat indifferent for both, he might
Yet have provided for their Children's right,
If they grew wiser, not his own, that so
They might repent, yet under treason, who
Ne'er promis'd faith: though now we cannot spare
(And not be worse) Kings, on those terms, they are
No worse than we could spare (and have been fav'd)
Original sin. So then those Priests that rav'd
And prophesy'd, they did a kind of good
They knew not of, by whom the choice first flood.
Since, then, we may consider now as fit
State government, and all the Acts of it,
That we may know them yet, let us see how
They were derived, done, and are maintained now,
That Princes may by this yet understand
Why we obey as well as they command.
State a proportion'd colour'd table is,
Nobility the master-piece in this,
Serves to show distances; while being put
'Twixt sight and vastness they seem higher, but
As they're further off; yet as those blue hills
Which th'utmoft border of a Region fills,
They are great and worse parts, while in the steep
Of this great Perspective they seem to keep
Further absent from those below, though this Exalted Spirit, that's sure a free Soul, is
A greater Privilege than to be born
At Venice, although he seek not rule, doth scorn
Subjection, but as he is flesh, and so
He is to dulness, shame, and many moe
The State-Progress of Ill.

Such properties, knows, but the Painter's Art,
All in the frame is equal. That desert
Is a more living thing, and doth obey
As he gives poor, for God's sake (though they
And Kings ask it not so), thinks Honours are
Figures compos'd of lines irregular,
And happy-high knows no election
Raiseth man to true Greatnes but his own.
Meanwhile sugar'd Divines, next place to this,
Tell us Humility and Patience is
The way to Heaven, and that we must there
Look for our Kingdom; that the great'ft rule here
Is for to rule ourselves. And that they might Say this the better, they to no place have right
B'inheritance, while whom Ambition fways,
Their office is to turn it other ways.

Those yet, whose harder minds Religion
Cannot invade, nor turn from thinking on
A present greatness, that combin'd curse of Law
Of officers' and Neighbours' spite doth draw
Within such whirlpools, that till they be drown'd
They ne'er get out, but only swim them round.

Thus brief, since that the infinite of ill
Is neither easie told nor safe, I will
But only note how freeborn Man, subdu'd
By his own choice, that was at first endu'd

18
The State-Progres of Ill.

With equal power over all, doth now submit
That infinite of Number, Spirit, Wit,
To some eight Monarchs. Then why wonder Men
Their rule of horses?
The world, as in the Ark of Noah, refts
Compos'd as then, few Men and many Beasts.

Aug. 1608.
At Merlou in France.
SATYRA SECUNDA
OF TRAVELLERS FROM PARIS.

BEN JOHNSON, travel is a second birth
Unto the Children of another Earth;
Only as our King Richard was, so they appear,
New born to another World, with teeth and hair.
While got by English Parents, carried in
Some Womb of thirty-tun and lightly twin,
They are delivered at Calais or at Dieppe,
And strangely stand, go feed themselves, nay, keep
Their own money straightways; but that is all,
For none can understand them when they call
For anything. No more than Badger,
That call'd the Queen Monsieur, laid a wager
With the King of his Dogs who understood
Them all alike, which Badger thought was good.
But that I may proceed. Since their birth is Only a kind of Metempychosis,
Such Knowledge as their Memory could give
They have for help, what time these Souls do live
In English clothes; a body which again
Satyra Secunda.

They never rise unto, but, as you see
When they come home, like children yet that be
Of their own bringing up; all they learn is
Toys and the Language, but to attain this
You must conceive they’re cosen’d, mocked, and come
To Fourbourgs St. Germans, there take a Room
Lightly about th’ Ambassadors, and where,
Having no Church, they come Sundays to hear
An invitation which they have most part,
If their outside but promise a desert,
To sit above the Secretaries’ place,
Although it be almost as rare a case
To see English well cloth’d here, as with you
At London, Indians. But that your view
May comprehend at once them gone for Blois
Or Orleans; learn’d French, now no more Boys
But perfect men at Paris, putting on
Some forc’d disguise, or labour’d fashion,
To appear strange at home, besides their stay,
Laugh and look on with me, to see what they
Are now become; but that the poorer sort,
A subject not fit for my Muse nor sport,
May pass untouch’d, let’s but consider what
Elpus is now become, once young, handsome, and that
Was such a Wit, as very well with four
Of the six might have made one, and no more,
Had he been at their Valentine, and could Agree, your Rus should use the stock who would Carefully in that, ev'n as 'twere his own
Put out their Jefts, briefly one that was grown
Ripe to another taste than that wherein
He is now seafoned and dry'd, as in
His face by this you see, which would perplex
A stranger to define his years, or sex;
To which his wrinkles, when he speaks doth give
That Age his words should have, while he doth strive,
As if such births had never come from brain
To shew his mots deliver'd without pain,
Nor without After-throes. Sometimes as grace
Did overflow in circles o're his face,
Ev'n to the brim, which he thinks sure
If this posture do but so long endure
That it be fix'd by Age he'll look as like
A speaking sign, as our St. George to strike,
That, where he is, none but will hold their peace
If th' have but the least good manners, or confess,
If he should speak, he did presume too far
In speaking then, when others readier are.
Now that he speaks are compleamental speeches
That never go off but below the breeches
Of him he doth salute, while he doth wring
And with some loose French words which he doth string,

Windeth about the arms, the legs and sides,
Most serpent-like of any man that bides
His indirect approach, which being done
Almost without an introduction,
If he have heard but any bragging French
Boaft of the favor of some noble wench,
He'll swear 'twas he did her graces posses,
And damn his own soul for the wickedness
Of other men, strangest of all in that.
But I am weary to describe you what,
Ere this, you can.
As for the little fry
That all along the street turn up the eye
At everything they meet, that have not yet
Seen that swol’n vicious Queen Margaret,
Who were a monster ev’n without her sin,
Nor the Italian comedies wherein
Women play Boys.—I ceafe to write.
To end this Satire and bid thee good Night.

Sept. 1608.
I MUST depart, but like to his last breath
That leaves the seat of life for liberty,
I go, but dying, and in this our death
Where soul and soul is parted, it is I
The deader part yet fly away,
While she, alas! in whom before
I liv'd, dies her own death and more,
I feeling mine too much, and her own stay.
But since I must depart, and that our love
Springing at first but in an earthly mould
Transplanted to our souls, now doth remove
Earthly affects, which time and distance would,
Nothing now can our loves allay,
Though as the better Spirits will
That both love us and know our ill,
We do not either all the good we may.
Thus when our Souls that must immortal be,
For our loves cannot die, nor we (unles
We die not both together) shall be free
Unto their open and eternal peace.
Sleep, Death's Embassador, and best
Image, doth yours often so show,
That I thereby must plainly know,
Death unto us must be freedom and rest.

May 1608.

24
MADRIGAL.

HOW should I love my best?
What though my love unto that height be grown,
    That taking joy in you alone,
I utterly this world detest.
Should I not love it yet as th' only place,
Where Beauty hath his perfect grace,
    And is poss'd?

But I beauties despise.
You, universal beauty seem to me,
Giving and shewing form and degree
    To all the rest, in your fair eyes.
Yet should I not love them as parts whereon
Your beauty, their perfection,
    And top doth rise?

But ev'n my self I hate.
So far my love is from the least delight,
    That at my very self I spite.
Senseless of any happy state,
Yet may I not with justest reason fear,
How hating hers, I truly her
    Can celebrate?
Madrigal.

Thus unresolved still,
Although world, life, nay what is fair beside,
I cannot for your sake abide,
Methinks I love not to my fill.
Yet, if a greater love you can devise,
In loving you some otherwise,
Believe’t I will.
ANOTHER.

DEAR, when I did from you remove,
    I left my joy, but not my love;
    That never can depart.
It neither higher can ascend,
    Nor lower bend.
Fixt in the centre of my heart,
    As in his place,
And lodged so, how can it change,
    Or you grow strange?
Those are earth's properties and base.
Each where, as the bodies divine,
    Heav'n's lights and you to me will shine.
TO HIS FRIEND BEN JOHNSON, OF HIS HORACE MADE ENGLISH.

It was not enough Ben Johnson to be thought Of English Poets best, but to have brought In greater state to their acquaintance one So equal to himself and thee, that none Might be thy second, while thy Glory is To be the Horace of our times and his.
EPITAPH. CÆCIL-BOULFER
QUÆ POST LANGUESCENTEM MORBUM
NON SINE INQUIETUDINE
SPIRITUS &C. CONSCIENCYÆ OBIIT.

Intelligitur de figurâ mortis præfigendâ.

METHINKS Death like one laughing lies,
    Shewing his teeth, shutting his eyes,
Only thus to have found her here
He did with so much reason fear,
    And she despise.

For barring all the gates of Sin,
    Death's open ways to enter in,
She was with a strict siege beset,
    So what by force he could not get,
    By time to win.

This mighty Warrior was deceived yet,
For what he mutin* in her powers, thought
    Was but their zeal;
And what by their excess might have been wrought,
    Her faits did heal.

* Mutiny.
Epitaph Cæcil Boulfer.

Till that her noble soul, by these, as wings,
Transcending the low pitch of earthly things,
As being reliev'd by God and set at large,
And grown by this, worthy a higher charge,
Triumphing over Death to Heaven fled,
And did not die, but left her body dead.

July 1609.
EPITAPH. GULI. HERBERT DE SWANSEY
QUI SINE PROLE OBIIT AUG. 1609.

GREAT Spirit, that in New Ambition,
    Stoop'd not below his merit,
But with his proper worth being carry'd on,
Stoop'd at no second place, till now in one
    He doth all place inherit.

Live endless here in such brave memory,
    The best tongue cannot spot it;
While they which knew, or but have heard of thee,
Muft never hope thy like again to be,
    Since thou haft not begot it.
IN A GLASS WINDOW FOR INCONSTANCY.

LOVE, of this clearest, frailest glass,
Divide the properties, so as
In the division may appear
Clearness for me, frailty for her.
ELEGY FOR THE PRINCE.*

MUST he be ever dead? Cannot we add
Another life unto that Prince that had
Our souls laid up in him? Could not our love,
Now when he left us, make that body move
After his death one Age? And keep unite
That frame wherein our souls did so delight?
For what are souls but love? since they do know
Only for it, and can no further go.
Sense is the Soul of Beasts, because none can Proceed so far as t'understand like man.
And if Souls be more where they love than where
They animate, why did it not appear
In keeping him alive? Or how is fate
Equal to us, when one man's private hate
May ruin Kingdoms, when he will expose
Himself to certain death, and yet all those
Not keep alive this Prince, who now is gone,
Whose loves would give thousands of lives for one?
Do we then die in him, only as we
May in the world's harmonique body see
An universally diffused soul

* Henry, Prince of Wales. He died in November, 1612.
Elegy for the Prince.

Move in the parts which moves not in the whole?
So though we rest with him, we do appear
To live and stir awhile, as if he were Still quickening us? Or do (perchance) we live
And know it not? See we not Autumn give Back to the earth again what it received
In th'early Spring? And may not we deceived
Think that those powers are dead, which do but sleep,
And the world's soul doth reunited keep?
And though this Autumn gave what never more
Any Spring can unto the world restore,
May we not be deceived, and think we know
Our selves for dead? Because that we are so
Unto each other, when as yet we live
A life his love and memory doth give,
Who was our world's soul, and to whom we are
So reunite, that in him we repair
All other our affections ill bestowed:
Since by this love we now have such abode
With him in Heaven as we had here, before
He left us dead. Nor shall we question more
Whether the Soul of Man be memory
As Plato thought: * We and posterity

* It would be interesting to know where Plato has made this singular assertion. I fear it is more easy to account for Herbert's remark than to corroborate it.
Elegy for the Prince.

Shall celebrate his name, and virtuous grow
Only in memory that he was so,
And on those terms we may seem yet to live,
Because he lived once, though we shall strive
To shoo away this seeming life so fast,
As if with us 'twere not already past.
We then are dead, for what doth now remain
To please us more, or what can we call pain
Now we have lost him? And what else doth make
Difference in life and death, but to partake
Nor Joy nor Pain? Oh death! couldst not fulfil
Thy rage against us no way but to kill
'This Prince in whom we liv'd? that so we all
Might perish by thy hand at once, and fall
Under his ruin? Thenceforth though we should
Do all the actions that the living would,
Yet we shall not remember that we live,
No more than when our mother's womb did give
That life we felt not. Or should we proceed
To such a wonder, that the dead should breed,
It should be wrought to keep that memory
Which being his, can, therefore, never die.

November 9, 1612.
EPITAPH OF KING JAMES.

HERE lies King James, who did so propagate Unto the World that blest and quiet state Wherein his subjects liv'd, he seemed to give That peace which Christ did leave; and did so live, As once that King and Shepherd of his Sheep, That whom God saved, here he seemed to keep, Till with that innocent and single heart With which he first was crown'd he did depart, To better life. Great Brittain, so lament That Strangers more than thou may yet resent The sad effects, and while they feel the harm They must endure from the victorious arm Of our King Charles, may they so long complain, That tears in them force thee to weep again.
A VISION.
A LADY COMBING HER HAIR.

WITHIN an open curled sea of gold
   A Bark of Ivory one day I saw,
       Which striking with his oars did seem to draw
Tow’rds a fair Coast which I then did behold.

A Lady held the Stern, while her white hand,
   Whiter than either ivory or sail,
       Over the surging waves did so prevail
That she had now approached near the land.

When suddenly, as if she feared some wrack,
   And yet the Sky was fair, and Air was clear,
       And neither Rock, nor Monster did appear
Doubling the Point, which spied, she turned back.

Then with a second course I saw her steer,
   As if she meant to reach some other Bay,
       Though in the Bark some waves now entered were.
A Vision.

Though varying oft her course at last I found,
While I in quest of the Adventure go,
The Sail took down and Oars had ceased to row,
And that the Bark itself was run aground.

She had given over combing.

Her face.
Her hair put up and comb cast away.

Wherewith Earth’s fairest creature I beheld,
For which both Bark and Sea I gladly loft.
Let no Philosopher, of Knowledge boast,
Unles that he my Vision can unfold.
TEARS flow no more, or if you needs must flow,
    Fall yet more flow,
Do not the world invade.
From smaller springs than yours rivers have grown,
    And they again a Sea have made
Brackish like you, and which like you hath flown.

Ebb to my heart, and on the burning fires
    Of my desires
Let your torrents fall.
From smaller Sparks than theirs such sparks arise
    As into flame converting all,
This world might be but my love’s sacrifice.

Yet if, the tempests of my sighs, so slow
    You both must flow,
And my desires still burn,
Since that in vain all help my love requires,
    Why may not yet their rages turn
To dry those tears and to blow out those fires?

Italy, 1614.

DITTY

TO THE TUNE OF A CHE DEL QUANTO

MIO OF PESARINO.

WHERE now shall these accents go?
At which creatures silent grow
While Woods and Rocks do speak,
And seem to break
Complains too long for them to hear,
Saying I call in vain: Echo—All in vain.

\[
\begin{align*}
\vdots & \vdots & \vdots & \vdots \\
\end{align*}
\]

Where there is no relief: Ec.—Here is no relief.

Ah why then should I fear
Unto her rocky heart to speak that grief
In whose laments these bear a part?
Then, cruel heart,
Do but some answer give.
I do but crave. = Do you forbid to live or bid to live?

Echo—Live.

\[40\]
DITTY.

Can I then live to draw that breath
    Which must bid farewell to thee?
Yet how should death not seize on me?
Since absence from the life I hold so dear must needs be death.

While I do feel in parting
    Such a living dying,
As in this my most fatal hour,
    Grief such a life doth lend
As quick'ned by his power
    Even death cannot end.

I am the first that ever lov'd,
    He yet that for the place contends,
Against true love so much offends
That even this way it is prov'd.

41
For whose affection once is shown,
No longer can the World beguile;
Who sees his penance all the while,
He holds a Torch to make her known.

You are the first were ever lov'd,
And who may think this not so true,
So little knows of love or you,
It need not otherwise be prov'd.

For though the more judicious eyes
May know when Diamonds are right,
There is required a greater light
Their estimate and worth to prize.

While they who most for beauty strive
Can with no Art so lovely grow,
As she who doth but only owe
So much as true affections give.

Thus first of Lovers I appear,
For more appearance makes me none,
And thus are you belov'd alone,
That are priz'd infinitely dear.
Epitaph of a Stinking Poet.

Yet, as in our Northern Clime,
Rare fruits, though late, appear at last;
As we may see some years being past,
Our Orange trees grow ripe with time.

So think not strange, if Love to break
His wonted Silence now makes bold;
For a Love is seven years old,
Is it not time to learn to speak?

Then gather in that, which doth grow
And ripen to that fairest hand.
’Tis not enough that trees do stand
If their fruit fall and perish too.

EPITAPH OF A STINKING POET.

HERE stinks a Poet I confess,
Yet wanting breath stinks so much less.
A DITTY TO THE TUNE OF COSE FERITE,
MADE BY LORENZO ALLEGRE TO ONE
SLEEPING. To be sung.

Ah Wonder! And no Star shining.
So fair a heaven, Ay me and no Star, &c.
So fair, &c. ’Tis past my divining.

Yet stay!
May not perchance this be some rising Morn
Which in the scorn
Of our World’s light discloses
This air of violets, that sky of roses?

’Tis so!
An oriental sphere
Doth open and appear,
Ascending bright;
Then since thy hymen I chant
May’st thou new pleasures grant,
Admired light.
EPITAPH

ON SIR EDWARD SACKVILLE'S CHILD,
WHO DIED IN HIS BIRTH.

READER! here lies a child that never cried,
   And therefore never died.
   'Twas neither old nor young,
Born to this and the other world in one.
   Let us then cease to moan,
Nothing that ever died hath liv'd so long.
COME hither, Womankind, and all their worth,
Give me thy kisses as I call them forth;
Give me thy billing kisses; that of the Dove,
    A Kiss of Love;
The Melting Kisses, a Kiss that doth consume
    To a perfume;
The extract Kisses, of every sweet a part;
    A Kiss of Art;
The Kisses which ever stirs some new delight,
    A Kiss of Might;
The twacking smacking Kisses, and when you cease,
    A Kiss of Peace;
The Musick Kisses, crotchet and quaver time;
    The Kisses of Rhyme;
The Kisses of Eloquence which doth belong
    Unto the tongue;
The Kisses of all the Sciences in one,
    The Kiss alone.
So 'tis enough.
DITTY.

If you refuse me once, and think again,
    I will complain.
You are deceived; Love is no work of Art,
    It must be got and born,
    Not made and worn,
Or such wherein you have no part.

Or do you think they more than once can die
    Whom you deny?
Who tell you of a thousand deaths a day,
    Like the old Poets feign,
    And tell the pain
They met but in the common way?

Or do you think it is too soon to yield
    And quit the Field?
You are deceived, they yield who first intreat.
    Once one may crave for love,
    But more would prove
This heart too little, that too great.

47
Give me then so much love, that we may burn
Past all return,
Who midst your beauties, flames, and spirit live,
So great a light must find
As to be blind
To all but what their fires give.

Then give me so much love, as in one point,
Fixed and conjoint,
May make us equal in our flames arise,
As we shall never start,
Until we dart
Lightning upon the envious eyes.

Then give me so much love, that we may move
Like stars of love,
And glad and happy times to Lovers bring,
While glorious in one sphere
We still appear
And keep an everlasting spring.

Ditty.
ELEGY OVER A TOMB.

Must I then see, alas! eternal night
   Sitting upon those fairest eyes,
And closing all those beams, which once did rise
   So radiant and bright,
That light and heat in them to us did prove
   Knowledge and Love?

Oh, if you did delight no more to stay
   Upon this low and earthly stage,
But rather chose an endless heritage,
   Tell us at least, we pray,
Where all the beauties that those ashes ow'd
   Are now bestowed?

Doth the Sun now his light with yours renew?
   Have Waves the curling of your hair?
Did you restore unto the Sky and Air
   The red and white and blue?
Have you vouchsafed to flowers since your death,
   That sweetest breath?
Elegy over a Tomb.

Had not Heav'n's Lights else in their houses slept,
Or to some private life retir'd?
Must not the Sky and Air have else conspir'd
And in their Regions wept?
Must not each flower else the earth could breed
Have been a weed?

But thus enrich'd may we not yield some cause
Why they themselves lament no more,
That must have changed course they held before,
And broke their proper Laws,
Had not your Beauties giv'n their second birth
To Heaven and Earth?

Tell us, for Oracles must still ascend
For those that crave them at your tomb;
Tell us, where are those Beauties now become
And what they now intend;
Tell us, alas! that cannot tell our grief,
Or hope relief.

1617.
EPITAPH ON SIR FRANCIS VERE.

READER,-

If thou appear
Before that tomb attention give,
And do not fear,
Unless it be to live,
For dead is great Sir Francis Vere.

Of whom this might be said, Should God ordain
One to destroy all sinners whom That One
Redeem'd not there, that so He might atone
His chosen flock, and take from earth that stain
That spots it still, he worthy were alone
To finish it, and have, when they were gone,
This world for him made Paradise again.
TO MRS. DIANA CEYLL.

DIANA CEYLL, that rare beauty thou dost show
Is not of Milk, or Snow,
Or such as pale and whitely things do owe,
But an illustrious Oriental Bright,
Like to the Diamond's refracted light,
Or early Morning breaking from the Night.

Nor are thy hair and eyes made of that ruddy beam
Or golden-sanded stream
Which we find still the vulgar Poet's theme,
But reverend black, and such as you would say
Light did but serve it, and did shew the way
By which at first night did precede the day.

Nor is that symmetry of parts and form divine
Made of one vulgar line,
Or such as any know how to define,
But of proportions new, so well exprest
That the perfections in each part confess
Are beauties to themselves and to the rest.
To Mrs. Diana Cecyll.

Wonder of all thy Sex! let none henceforth inquire
  Why they so much admire,
Since they that know thee best ascend no higher.
Only be not with common praisés wooed,
Since admiration were no longer good,
When men might hope more then they understood.
TO HER EYES.

BLACK eyes, if you seem dark,
   It is because your beams are deep
   And with your soul united keep.
Who could discern
Enough into them there, might learn
   Whence they derive that mark,
   And how their power is such
That all the wonders which proceed from thence,
Affecting more the mind then sense,
   Are not so much
The works of light, as influence.

As you then joined are
Unto the soul, so it again
By its connexion doth pertain
   To that first cause,
Who, giving all their proper Laws,
   By you doth best declare
How he at first being hid

54
To her Eyes.

Within the veil of an eternal night,
Did frame for us a second light,
And after bid
It serve for ordinary light.

His image then you are;
If there be any yet who doubt
What power it is that doth look out
Through that your black,
He will not an example lack,
If he suppose that there
Were grey or hazel Glass,
And that through them, though sight or soul
might shine,
He must yet at the last define
That beams which pass
Through black, cannot but be divine.
TO HER HAIR.

BLACK beamy hairs, which so seem to arise
From the extraction of those eyes,
That unto you she destin-like doth spin
The beams she spares, what time her soul retires,
   And by those hallowed fires
   Keeps house all night within.

Since from within her awful front you shine,
   As threads of life which she doth twine,
And thence ascending with the fatal rays
To crown those temples, where Love's wonders wrought,
   We afterwards fee brought
   To vulgar light and praise.

Lighten through all your regions, till we find
   The causes why we are grown blind,
That when we should your Glories comprehend,
Our sight recoils, and turneth back again,
   And doth, as 'twere in vain,
   Itself to you extend.
To her Hair.

Is it, because past black, there is not found
   A fix'd or horizontal bound?
And so as it doth terminate the white,
It may be said all colours to infold,
   And in that kind to hold
Somewhat of infinite?

Or is it that the centre of our sight,
   Being veiled in its proper night,
Discerns your blackness by some other sense
Than that by which it doth pied colours see,
   Which only therefore be
Known by their difference?

Tell us, when on her front in curls you lie,
   So diaper'd from that black eye,
That your reflected forms may make us know
That shining light in darkness all would find,
   Were they not upward blind
With the Sun-beams below.
SONNET OF BLACK BEAUTY.

BLACK beauty, which above that common light,
    Whose Power can no colors here renew
But those which darkness can again subdue,
Doft still remain unvary'd to the light?

And like an object equal to the view,
    And neither chang'd with day nor hid with night,
When all these colours which the world call bright,
And which old Poetry doth so pursue,

Are with the night so perished and gone,
    That of their being there remains no mark,
Thou still abidest so entirely one,
    That we may know thy blackness is a spark
Of light inaccessible, and alone
    Our darkness which can make us think it dark.
ANOTHER SONNET TO BLACK IT SELF.

THOU Black wherein all colours are compos’d,
And unto which they all at last return;
Thou colour of the Sun where it both burn,
And shadow, where it cools; in thee is clos’d
Whatever nature can, or hath dispos’d
In any other here; from thee do rise
Those tempers and complexions which disclos’d
As parts of thee, do work as mysteries
Of that thy hidden power; when thou dost reign
The characters of fate shine in the Skies,
And tell us what the Heavens do ordain:
But when Earth’s common light shines to our eyes
Thou so retir’d thyself, that thy disdain
All revelation unto man denies.
THE FIRST MEETING.

As sometimes with a Sable Cloud
We see the Heavns bow’d,
And darkning all the fire,
Until the lab’ring fires they do contain
Break forth again;
Ev’n so from under your black hair
I saw such an unusual blaze
Lightning and sparkling from your eyes,
And with unused prodigies
Forcing such amaze,
That I did judge your empire here
Was not of love alone but fear.

But as all that is violent
Doth by degrees relent;
So when that sweetest face,
Growing at last to be serene and clear,
Did now appear
With all its wonted heav’nly grace,
The First Meeting.

And your appeased eyes did send
A beam from them so soft and mild
That former terrors were exil'd,
And all that could amaze did end;
Darkness in me was chang'd to light,
Wonder to love, love to delight.

Nor here yet did your goodness cease
My heart and eyes to bless,
For, being past all hope
That I could now enjoy a better state,
An orient gate
(As if the Heav'n's themselves did ope)
First found in thee, and then discolof'd
So gracious and sweet a smile,
That my soul ravished the while,
And wholly from itself unloof'd,
Seem'd hov'ring in your breath to rise
To feel an air of Paradise.

Nor here yet did your favours end,
For whilst I down did bend,
As one who now did miss
A soul which grown much happier than before
Would turn no more,
You did bestow on me a kiss,
The First Meeting.

And in that kiss a soul infuse
Which was so fashion'd by your mind,
And which was so much more refin'd
Than that I formerly did use,
That if one soul found joys in thee,
The other framed them new in me.

But as those bodies which dispense
Their beams, in parting hence
Those beams do recollect,
Until they in themselves resumed have
The forms they gave;
So when your gracious aspect
From me was turned once away,
Neither could I thy soul retain
Nor you give mine leave to remain,
To make with you a longer stay,
Or suffered ought else to appear
But your hair, night's hemisphere.

Only as we in Loadstones find
Virtue of such a kind,
That what they once do give,
Being neither to be chang'd by any Clime
Or forc'd by time,
Doth ever in its subjects live;
The First Meeting.

So though I be from you retir'd,
The power you gave yet still abides,
And my soul ever so guides
By your magnetique touch inspir'd,
That all it moves, or is inclin'd,
Comes from the motions of your mind.
A MERRY RIME

SENT TO THE LADY WROTH UPON THE BIRTH OF MY LORD OF PEMBROKE'S CHILD, BORN IN THE SPRING.

MADAM, though I'm one of those,
That every spring use to compose,
That is, add feet unto round prose,
Yet you a further art disclose,
And can, as every body knows,
Add to those feet fine dainty toes.
Satyrs add nails, but they are shrews.
My muse therefore no further goes,
But for her feet craves shooes and hose,
Let a fair season add a Rose.
While thus attir'd we'll oppose
The tragick buskins of our foes.
And herewith, Madam, I will close,
And 'tis no matter how it shows:
All I care is, if the Child grows.
THE THOUGHT.

If you do love as well as I,
Then every minute from your heart
A thought doth part,
And winged with desire doth fly
Till it hath met in a freight line
A thought of mine,
So like to yours, we cannot know
Whether of both doth come or go,
Till we define
Which of us two that thought did owe.

I say then that your thoughts which pass
Are not so much the thoughts you meant
As those I sent,
For as my image in a glass
Belongs not to the glass you see,
   But unto me,
So when your fancy is so clear
That you would think you saw me there,
   It needs must be
That it was I did first appear.
The Thought.

Likewise when I send forth a thought
My reason tells me, 'tis the same
Which from you came,
And which your beauteous Image wrought.
Thus while our thoughts by turns do lead
None can precede;
And thus while in each other's mind
Such interchanged forms we find,
Our loves may plead
To be of more then vulgar kind.

May you then often think on me,
And by that thinking know 'tis true
I thought on you.
I in the same belief will be,
While by this mutual addresse
We will possesse
A love must live, when we do die.
Which rare and secret property
You will confess,
If you do love as well as I.
TO A LADY WHO DID SING EXCELLENTLY.

WHEN our rude and unfashioned words, that long
A being in their elements enjoy'd, Senseless and void,
Come at last to be formed by thy tongue,
And from thy breath receive that life and place,
   And perfect grace,
That now thy power, diffus'd through all their parts,
   Are able to remove
All the obstructions of the hardest hearts,
And teach the most unwilling how to love.

When they again, exalted by thy voice, Tun'd by thy soul, dismiss'd into the air,
   To us repair,
A living, moving, and harmonious noise,
Able to give the love they do create
   A second state,
To a Lady who did Sing excellently.

And charm not only all his griefs away,
    And his defects restore,
But make him perfect, who, the Poets say,
Made all was ever yet made heretofore.

When again all these rare perfections meet,
Composed in the circle of thy face,
    As in their place,
So to make up of all one perfect sweet,
Who is not then so ravished with delight,
    Ev'n of thy sight,
That he can be asur'd his sense is true,
    Or that he die, or live,
Or that he do enjoy himself, or you,
Or only the delights, which you did give?
MELANDER,
SUPPOS'D TO LOVE SUSAN, BUT DID
LOVE ANN.

WHO doth presume my Mistress's name to scan
Goes about more than any way he can,
Since all men think that it is Susan.  Echo—Anne.

What sayst?  Then tell who is as white as Swan,
While others set by her are pale and wan;
Then, Echo, speak, Is it not Susan?  Ec.—Anne.

Tell, Echo, yet, who's Middle's but a span,
Some being gross as bucket, round as pan?
Say, Echo, then, Is it not Susan?  Ec.—Anne.

Say, is she not soft as meal without bran?
Though yet in great haft once from me she ran,
Must I not however love Susan?  Ec.—Anne.
ECHO TO A ROCK.

THOU heaven-threatening Rock, gentler then she,
Since of my pain
Thou still more sensible will be,
Only when thou giv’st leave but to complain.
    Echo—Complain.
But thou dost answer too, although in vain.
Thou answer’st when thou can’st no pity shew.
    Echo—Oh!
What, canst thou speak and pity too?
Then yet a further favour do,
And tell if of my griefs I any end shall know.
    Echo—No.
Sure she will pity him that loves her so truly.
    Echo—You lie.
Vile Rock, thou now grow’st so unruly,
That hadst thou life, as thou hast voice,
Thou shouldst die at my foot.
    Echo—Die at my foot.
  70

Echo to a Rock.

Thou canst not make me do't
Unless thou leave it to my choice,
Who thy hard sentence shall fulfill,
When thou shalt say I die to please her only will.

_Echo_—I will.

When she comes hither, then, I pray thee, tell
Thou art my Monument, and this my last farewell.

_Echo_—Well.
ECHO IN A CHURCH.

WHEN shall my troubled soul at large
Discharge
The burden of her sins, oh where?
   Echo—Here.
Whence comes this voice I hear?
   Who doth this grace afford?
   If it be thou, O Lord,

Say if thou hear my prayers, when I call.
   Echo—All.
And wilt thou pity grant when I do cry?
   Echo—I.

Then though I fall,
   Thy grace will my defects supply.
   But who will keep my soul from ill,
Quench bad desires, reform my Will?
   Echo—I will.
   72
O may that Will and Voice be blest
Which yields such comforts unto one distressed!
More blessed yet, wouldst thou thyself unmask,
Or tell at least who undertakes this task.

_Echo—Ask._

Since now with crying I am grown so weak,
I shall want force even to crave thy name.
O speak before I wholly weary am.

_Echo—I am._
TO HIS MISTRESS FOR HER TRUE PICTURE.

DEATH, my life's Mistrefs, and the Sovereign Queen
Of all that ever breath'd, though yet unseen,
My heart doth love you best, yet I confess,
Your picture I beheld, which doth express
No such eye-taking beauty; you seem lean,
Unless you're mended since. Sure he did mean
No honour to you, that did draw you so;
Therefore I think it false. Besides, I know
The picture Nature drew (which sure's the best)
Doth figure you by sleep and sweetest rest.
Sleep, Nurse of our life, Care's best repose,
Nature's high'est rapture, and the vision giver.
Sleep, which when it doth seize us, souls go play,
And make Man equal as he was first day.
Yet some will say can pictures have more life
Than the original? To end this strife,
Sweet Mistrefs come, and shew yourself to me
In your true form, while then I think to see
Some beauty Angelick, that comes to unlock
My body's prison, and from life unfrock

74
To his Mistrefs for her true Picture.

My well-divorced Soul, and set it free
To liberty eternal: thus you see,
I find the Painter's error, and protect
Your absent Beauties, ill drawn, by th'effect.
For grant it were your work and not the Grave's,
Draw Love by Madness then, Tyrants by Slaves,
Because they make men such. Dear Mistrefs, then,
If you would not be seen by owl-ey'd men,
Appear at noon i'th'Air, with so much light
The Sun may be a Moon, the Day a Night,
Clear to my soul, but dark'ning the weak sense
Of those, the other World's Cimmeriens,
And in your fatal robe embroidered
With Star characters, teaching me to read
The destiny of Mortals, while your clear brow
Presents a Majesty, to instruct me how
To love, or dread nought else: May your bright hair,
Which are the threads of life, fair crown'd appear,
With that your Crown of Immortality.
In your right hand, the Keys of Heaven be,
In th'other, those of the Infernal Pit,
Whence none retires if once he enter it.
And here let me complain, how few are those Whose souls you shall from earth's vast dungeon loose
To endless happiness; few that attend
You the true guide unto their journey's end.

75
To his Mistress for her true Picture.

And if old Virtue's way narrow were,
'Tis rugged now, having no passenger.
Our life is but a dark and stormy night,
To which sense yields a weak and glimmering light,
While wandering Man thinks he discerneth all
By that which makes him but mistake and fall.
He sees enough, who doth his darkness see.
These are great lights, by which less dark'ned be.
Shine then Sun-bright, or through my senses' veil,
A day star of the light doth never fail.
Shew me that goodness which compounds the strife
'Twixt a long sickness and a weary life;
Set forth that Justice which keeps all in awe
Certain and equal more than any Law;
Figure that happy and eternal Rest,
Which till man do enjoy, he is not blest;
Come and appear then, dear Soul-ravisher,
Heav'n's lightest Usher, Man's deliverer;
And do not think, when I new beauties see,
They can withdraw my settled love from thee.
Flesh-beauty strikes me not at all, I know:
When thou dost leave them to the grave, they show
Worse than they now shew thee: they shall not move
In me the least part of delight, or love,
But as they teach your power. Be the nut brown,
The loveliest colour which the flesh doth crown,
To his Mistress for her true Picture.

I’ll think it like a Nut—a fair outside,
Within which worms and rottenness abide;
If fair, then like the Worm itself to be;
If painted, like their slime and fluttery.
If any yet will think their beauties best,
And will against you, spite of all, contest,
Seize them with Age; so in themselves they’ll hate
What they scorn’d in your picture, and too late
See their fault, and the Painter’s. Yet if this,
Which their great’st plague and wrinkled torture is,
Please not, you may to the more wicked fort,
Or such as of your praisés make a sport,
Denounce an open war, send chosen bands
Of Worms, your soldiers, to their fairest hands,
And make them leprous, scabb’d: upon their face
Let those your Pioneers, Ringworms, take their place,
And safely near with strong approaches got,
Intrench it round, while their teeths’ rampire rot,
With other Worms, nay with a damp inbred,
Sink to their senses, which they shall not dread.
And thus may all that ere they prided in,
Confound them now. As for the parts within
Send great Worms, which may undermine a way
Into their vital parts, and so display
That, your pale ensign on the walls; then let
Those worms your Veterans which never yet

77
To his Mistress for her true Picture.

Did fail, enter pell-mell and ranfack all.
Just as they see the well-rais’d building fall.
While they do this, your Forragers command,
The Caterpillars, to devour their land,
And with them Wasps, your wing’d-worm-horsemens, bring
To charge, in troop, those Rebels, with their fling.
All this, unless your beauty they confess.

And now, sweet Mistress, let me awhile digress
To admire these noble Worms whom I invoke,
And not the Muses. You that eat through oak
And bark, will you spare Paper and my Verse,
Because your praises they do here rehearse?

Brave Legions then, sprung from the mighty race
Of man corrupted, and which hold the place
Of his undoubted issue: you that are
Brain-born, Minerva-like, and, like her, war,
Well arm’d, complete, mail’d-jointed soldiers,
Whose force Herculean links in pieces tears,
To you the vengeance of all Spill-bloods falls,
Beast-eating Men, Men-eating cannibals,
Death privileg’d, were you in funder smit,
You do not lose your life, but double it.
Best-framed types of the Immortal Soul,
Which in your selves, and in each part, are whole.
To his Missres for her true Picture.

Laft-living Creatures, heirs of all the earth,
For when all men are dead, it is your birth;
When you die, your brave self-killed General,
For nothing else can kill him, doth end all.
What vermine-breeding body then thinks scorn
His flesh should be by your brave fury torn?
Willing, to you, this carcas I submit,
A gift so free, I do not care for it,
Which yet you shall not take until I see
My Missres first reveal herself to me.

Meanwhile, Great Missres, whom my soul admires,
Grant me your true picture, who it desires,
That he your matchless beauty might maintain,
'Gainst all men that will quarrels entertain.
For a Flesh-Missres, the worst I can do
Is but to keep the way that leads to you,
And howsoever the event doth prove,
To have Revenge below, Reward above.
Hear, from my body's prison, this my call,
Who from my mouth-grate and eye-window bawl.
EPITAPHS ON SIR PHILIP SIDNEY,
LYING IN ST. PAUL’S WITHOUT A MONUMENT,
TO BE FASTENED UPON THE CHURCH DOOR.

READER,—
Within this church Sir Philip Sidney lies,
Nor is it fit that I should more acquaint,
Left Superstition rise,
And men adore,
Soldiers, their Martyr; Lovers, their Saint.
EPITAPH FOR HIMSELF.

READER,—

The Monument which thou beholdest here,
Presents Edward Lord Herbert to thy sight,
A man, who was so free from either hope or fear,
To have, or lose this ordinary light,
That when to elements his body turned were
He knew, that as those elements would fight,
So his Immortal Soul should find above
With his Creator, Peace, Joy, Faith, and Love.
SONNET.

You well-compacted groves, whose light and shade
Mixt equally, produce nor heat nor cold,
Either to burn the young, or freeze the old,
But to one even temper being made,
Upon a Grove embroidering through each glade
An Airy Silver, and a Sunny Gold,
So clothe the poorest that they do behold
Themselves in riches which can never fade,
While the wind whistles, and the birds do sing,
While your twigs clip, and while the leaves do frisk,
While the fruit ripens which those trunks do bring,
Senseless to all but love, do you not spring
Pleasure of such a kind, as truly is
A self renewing vegetable blifs?

Made upon the Groves near Merlou Castle.
TO THE C. OF D.*

SINCE in your face, as in a beauteous sphere,
Delight and state so sweetly mix'd appear,
That Love's not light, nor Gravity severe,
All your attractive graces seem to draw,
A modest rigor keepeth so in awe,
That in their turns, each of them gives the law.

Therefore, though chaste and virtuous, desire
Through that, your native mildness, may aspire,
Until a just regard it dost acquire;
Yet if Love thence a forward hope project
You can, by virtue of a sweet neglect,
Convert it straight to reverend respect.

Thus, as in your rare temper, we may find
An excellence so perfect in each kind,
That a fair body hath a fairer mind;
So all the beams you diversly do dart,
As well on th'understanding as the heart,
Of love and honour equal cause impart.

* Possibly the Countess of Denbigh, the patroness of Carew.
I.

Why dost thou hate return instead of love?
And with such merciless despite
My faith and hope requite?
Oh! if th' affection cannot move,
Learn innocence yet of the Dove,
And thy disdain to juster bounds confine.
Or if 'twards Man thou equally decline
The rules of Justice and of Mercy too,
Thou may'st thy love to such a point refine
As it will kill more than thy hate can do.

2.

Love, love, Melaina, then, though death ensue,
Yet it is a greater fate
To die through love than hate.
Rather a victory pursue
To Beauty's lawful conquest due,
Than tyrant eyes envenom with disdain.
Or if thy Power thou wouldst so maintain
As equally to be both lov'd and dread,
Let timely Kiffs call to life again
Him whom thine eyes have Planet-strucken dead.

Kiffs, kiffs, Melaina, then, and do not stay
Until these sad effects appear
Which now draw on so near,
That didst thou longer help delay
My soul must fly so fast away
As would at once both life and love divorce;
Or if I needs must die without remorse,
Kiffs and embalm me so with that sweet breath,
That while thou triumph'st o'er Love and his force,
I may triumph yet over Fate and Death.
ELEGY FOR DOCTOR DUNN.*

WHAT though the vulgar and received praise
With which each common Poet strives to raise
His worthless Patron, seem to give the height
Of a true excellence, yet as the weight
Forced from his centre, must again recoil,
So every praise, as if it took some foil
Only because it was not well employ'd,
Turns to those senseless principles and void,
Which in some broken syllables being vouched
Cannot above an Alphabet be couched,
In which dissolved State they used to rest
Until some other in new forms invest
Their easy matter, striving so to fix
Glory with words and make the parts to mix.

But since praise that wants truth, like words that want
Their proper meaning, doth it self recant;
Such terms, however elevate and high,
Are but like meteors, which the pregnant Sky

* He will be better recognised as Dr. John Donne. He died March 31st, 1631.
Elegy for Dr. Dunn.

Varies in divers figures, till at last
They either be by some dark cloud o’recast,
Or wanting inward sustence do devolve,
And into their first Elements resolve.
Praisés, like garments then, if loose and wide,
Are subject to fall off; if gay and pied,
Make men ridiculous: The just and grave
Are those alone which men may wear and have.

How fitting were it then each had that part
Which is their due, and that no fraudulent art
Could so disguise the truth but they might own
Their rights, and by that property be known.
For since Praise is publick inheritance,
If any Inter-Commoner do chance
To give or take more praise than doth belong
Unto his part, he doth so great a wrong,
That all who claim an equal interest
May him implead until he do devest
His usurpations, and again restore
Unto the Publick what was theirs before.

Praisés should then, like definitions, be
Round, neat, convertible, such as agree
To persons, so that were their names conceal’d
Must make them known as well as if reveal’d,
Elegy for Dr. Dunn.

Such as contain the kind and difference
And all the properties arising thence.
All praises else, as more or less than due,
Will prove, or strangely false, or weakly true.

Having delivered now what praises are,
It rests that I should to the world declare
Thy praises, DUNN, whom I so lov'd alive
That with my witty Carew I should strive
To celebrate the dead, did I not need
A language by itself, which should exceed
All those which are in use: For while I take
Those common words, which men may even rake
From Dunghill-wits, I find them so defiled,
Slubber'd and false, as if they had exiled
Truth and propriety, such as do tell
So little other things, they hardly spell
Their proper meaning, and therefore unfit
To blazon forth thy merits, or thy wit.

Nor will it serve that thou didst so refine
Matter with words that both did seem divine
When thy breath utter'd them, for thou being gone
They fright did follow thee. Let therefore none
Hope to find out an Idiom and Sense
Equal to thee and to thy Eminence,
Elegy for Dr. Dunn.

Unless our gracious King give words their bound,
Call in false titles which each where are found
In Prose and Verse, and as bad Coin and Light
 Suppress them and their values, till the right
Take place and do appear, and then in lieu
Of those forg'd Attributes stamp some anew,
Which being current and by all allow'd
In Epitaphs and Tombs might be avow'd
More then their Escucheons. Meanwhile, because
Nor praise is yet confined to its laws,
Nor railing wants his proper dialect,
Let thy detraction thy late life detect,
And though they term all thy heat, forwardness,
Thy solitude, self-pride, faults, niggardness,
And on this false supposal would infer
They teach not others right, themselves who err,
Yet as men to the adverse part do ply
Those crooked things, which they would rectify,
So would perchance to loose and wanton Man
Such vice avail more than their virtues can.
THE BROWN BEAUTY.

1.

WHILE the two contraries of Black and White,
In the Brown Fay are so well unite,
That they no longer now seem opposite,
Who doubts but love hath this his colour chose,
Since he therein doth both th'extremes compose,
And as within their proper Centre close?

2.

Therefore, as it presents not to the view
That whitely raw and unconcocted hue
Which, Beauty, Northern Nations think the true,
So neither hath it that adust aspect
The Moor and Indian so much affect,
That for it they all other do reject.

3.

Thus while the White well shadow'd doth appear,
And black doth through his lustre grow so clear
That each in other equal part doth bear,
All in so rare proportion is combin'd
That the fair temper, which adorns her mind,
Is even to her outward form confin'd.

4.
Fay, your sexe's honour, then so live
That when the world shall with contention strive
To whom they would a chief perfection give,
They might the controversy so decide
As, quitting all extremes on either side,
You more than any may be dignify'd.
AN ODE
UPON A QUESTION MOVED WHETHER LOVE
SHOULD CONTINUE FOR EVER.

HAVING interr'd her Infant-birth,
The wat'ry ground, that late did mourn
Was firew'd with flow'rs, for the return
Of the wish'd Bridegroom of the Earth.

The well-accorded Birds did sing
Their hymns unto the pleasant time,
And in a sweet consoled chime
Did welcome in the cheerful Spring.

To which, soft whistles of the Wind,
And warbling murmurs of a Brook,
And varied notes of leaves that shook,
An harmony of parts did bind.

While doubling joy unto each other
All in so rare consent was shown,
No happiness that came alone,
Nor pleasure that was not another.
An Ode.

When with a love none can express
That mutually happy pair,
Melander and Celinda fair,
The season with their loves did bless.

Walking thus towards a pleasant grove,
Which did, it seem'd, in new delight
The pleasures of the time unite,
They give a triumph to their love.

They stay'd at last and on the grass
Repos'd so, as o're his breast
She bow'd her gracious head to rest,
Such a weight as no burden was.

While over either's compass'd waist
Their folded arms were so compos'd
As if in straitest bonds inclos'd,
They suffer'd for joys they did taste.

Long their fixt eyes to Heaven bent,
Unchanged they did never move,
As if so great and pure a love
No glafs but it could represent.

When, with a sweet though troubled look,
She first brake silence, saying, Dear Friend,
O that our love might take no end,
Or never had beginning took!
I speak not this with a false heart
(Wherewith his hand she gently strain'd),
Or that would change a love maintain'd
With so much faith on either part;

Nay, I protest; though Death with his
Worst Counsel should divide us here,
His terrors could not make me fear
To come where your lov'd presence is.

Only, if love's fire with the breath
Of life be kindled, I doubt
With our last air 'twill be breath'd out,
And quenched with the cold of death;

That if affection be a line
Which is clos'd up in our last hour,
Oh, how 'twould grieve me, any pow'r
Could force so dear a love as mine!

She scarce had done, when his shut eyes
An inward joy did represent
To hear Celinda thus intent
To a love he so much did prize,

Then with a look, it seem'd deny'd
All earthly pow'r but hers, yet so
As if to her breath he did owe
This borrow'd life, he thus replied:
An Ode.

O you, wherein, they say, Souls rest
Till they descend, pure heavenly fires,
Shall lustful and corrupt desires
With your immortal seed be blest?

And shall our Love, so far beyond
That low and dying appetite,
And which so saith desires unite,
Not hold in an eternal bond?

It is, because we should decline,
And wholly from our thoughts exclude
Objects that may the sense delude
And study only the Divine.

No sure, for if none can ascend
Ev'n to the visible degree
Of things created, how should we
The invisible comprehend?

Or rather, since that Pow'r express'd
His greatness in his works alone,
Being here best in's Creatures known,
Why is he not lov'd in them best?

But is't not true, which you pretend,
That since our love and knowledge here,
Only as parts of life appear,
So they with it should take their end?
An Ode.

O no, Belov'd, I am most sure
Those vertuous habits we acquire
As being with the Soul entire
Must with it evermore endure;

For if, where sins and vice reside
We find so foul a guilt remain,
As never dying in his stain
Still punish'd in the Soul doth bide;

Much more that true and real joy,
Which in a virtuous love is found
Must be more solid in its ground
Then Fate or Death can e're destroy.

Else should our Souls in vain elect,
And vainer yet were Heaven's laws,
When to an everlasting Cause
They gave a perishing effect.

Nor here on earth then, or above,
Our good affection can impair,
For where God doth admit the fair
Think you that he excludeth Love?

These eyes again then eyes shall see,
And hands again these hands enfold,
And all chaste pleasures can be told
Shall with us everlasting be.
An Ode.

For if no use of sense remain,
    When bodies once this life forsake,
Or they could no delight partake,
Why should they ever rise again?

And if every imperfect mind
    Make love the end of knowledge here,
How perfect will our love be, where
All imperfection is refined!

Let then no doubt, Celinda, touch,
    Much less your fairest mind invade:
Were not our souls immortal made
Our equal loves can make them such.

So when one wing can make no way
    Two joined can themselves dilate,
So can two persons propagate
When singly either would decay.

So when from hence we shall be gone,
    And be no more, nor you, nor I,
As one another's mystery,
Each shall be both, yet both but one.

This said, in her uplifted face,
    Her eyes, which did that beauty crown,
Were like two stars, that having fall'n down,
Look up again to find their place.
An Ode.

While such a moveless silent peace
Did cease on their becalmed sense,
One would have thought some Influence
Their ravish'd spirits did possess.
THE GREEN-SICKNESS BEAUTY.

Though the pale white within your cheek compos'd,
And doubtful light unto your eye confin'd,
Though your short breath not from itself unloos'd,
And careless motions of your equal mind,
Argue your beauties are not all discloos'd,

Yet as a rising beam, when first 'tis shewn,
Points fairer, than when it ascends more red,
Or as a budding rose, when first 'tis blown,
Smells sweeter far, than when it is more spread
As all things best by principles are known,

So in your green and flourishing estate
A beauty is discern'd more worthy love
Than that which further doth itself dilate,
And those degrees of variation prove,
Our vulgar wits so much do celebrate.
The Green-Sickness Beauty.

Thus though your eyes dart not that piercing blaze,
Which doth in busy Lovers' looks appear,
It is because you do not need to gaze
On other objects than your proper sphere,
Nor wander further than to run that maze.

So, if you want that blood which must succeed,
And give at last a tincture to your skin,
It is, because neither in outward deed,
Nor inward thought, you yet admit that sin,
For which your cheeks a guilty blush should need.

So if your breath do not so freely flow,
It is because you love not to consume
That vital treasure, which you do bestow
As well to vegetate as to perfume
Your Virgin leaves, as fast as they do grow.

Yet stay not here. Love for his right will call:
You were not born to serve your only will,
Nor can your beauty be perpetual.
'Tis your perfection for to ripen still,
And to be gathered, rather than to fall.
THE GREEN-SICKNESS BEAUTY.

FROM thy pale look, while angry Love doth seem
With more imperiousness to give his Law
Than when he blushingly doth beg esteem,
We may observe pied beauty in such awe,
That the brav'ft colour under her command
Affrighted, oft before you doth retire,
While, like a Statue of your self, you stand
In such symmetrique form, as doth require
No luftre but his own: As then in vain
One should flesh-colouring to statues add,
So were it to your native White a Stain,
If it in other ornaments were clad,
Than what your rich proportions do give,
Which in a boundless fair being unconfin'd,
Exalted in your soul, so seem to live,
That they become an emblem of your mind,
That so, who to your Orient White should join
Those fading qualities most eyes adore,
Were but like one, who gilding Silver Coin,
Gave but occasion to suspect it more.
LA GRALLETTA GALLANTE,

OR

THE SUN-BURN'D EXOTIQUE BEAUTY.

1.

CHILD of the Sun, in whom his Rays appear
Hatch'd to that luftre, as doth make thee wear
Heavn's livery in thy skin, what need'ft thou fear
The injury of Air, and change of Clime,
When thy exalted form is so sublime
As to transcend all power of change or time?

2.

How proud are they that in their hair but show
Some part of thee, thinking therein they owe
The greatest beauty Nature can bestow,
When thou art so much fairer to the sight,
As beams each where diffused are more bright
Than their deriv'd and secondary light.
3.
But Thou art cordial both to sight and taste,
While each rare fruit seems in his time to haste
To ripen in thee, till at length they waste
Themselves to inward sweets, from whence again,
They, like Elixirs, passing through each vein,
An endless circulation do maintain.

4.
How poor are they then, whom if we but greet,
Think that raw juice, which in their lips we meet,
Enough to make us hold their Kisses sweet;
When that rich odour, which in thee is smelt,
Can it self to a balmy liquor melt,
And make it to our inward senses felt.

5.
Leave then thy Country, Soil, and Mother's Home,
Wander a Planet this way, till thou come
To give our Lovers here their fatal doom,
While, if our beauties scorn to envy thine,
It will be just they to a Jaundice pine,
And by thy Gold, shew like some Copper-Mine.
PLATONICK LOVE.

I.

MADAM, your beauty and your lovely parts
Would scarce admit poetic praise and arts,
As they are Love’s most sharp and piercing darts;
Though, as again they only wound and kill,
The more deprav’d affections of our will,
You claim a right to commendation still.

2.

For as you can unto that height refine
All Loves delights, as while they do incline
Unto no vice, they so become divine,
We may as well attain your excellence,
As, without help of any outward sense
Would make us grow a pure Intelligence.
Platonick Love.

3.
And as a Soul, thus being quite abstract,
Complies not properly with any act,
Which from its better Being may detract,
So, through the virtuous habits which you infuse
It is enough that we may like and choose,
Without presuming yet to take or use.

4.
Thus Angels in their starry Orbs proceed
Unto Affection, without other need
Than that they still on contemplation feed,
Though as they may unto this Orb descend,
You can, when you would so much lower bend,
Give Joys beyond what Man can comprehend.

5.
Do not refuse, then Madam, to appear,
Since every radiant Beam comes from your Sphere,
Can so much more than any else endear,
As while through them we do discern each Grace
The multiplied lights from every Place,
Will turn and circle, with their rays, your face.
PLATONICK LOVE.

I.

MADAM, believe't, Love is not such a toy,
As it is sport but for the Idle Boy,
Or wanton Youth, since it can entertain
Our serious thoughts, and make us know how vain
All time is spent we do not thus imploy.

2.

For though strong passion oft on youth doth seize
It is not yet affection, but disease;
Caused from repletion, which their blood doth vex,
So that they love not Woman, but the Sex,
And care no more than how themselves to please.

3.

Whereas true Lovers check that appetite
Which would presume further than to invite
The Soul unto that part it ought to take,
When that from this address it would but make
Some introduction only to delight.

106
Platonick Love.

4.
For while they from the outward sense transplant
The love grew there in earthly mould, and scant,
To the Soul's spacious and immortal field,
They spring a love eternal, which will yield
All that a pure affection can grant.

5.
Besides, what time or distance might effect
Is thus remov'd, while they themselves connect
So far above all change, as to exclude
Not only all which might their sense delude,
But mind to any object else effect.

6.
Nor will the proof of Constancy be hard
When they have plac'd upon their Mind that guard
As no ignoble thought can enter there,
And Love doth such a Virtue persevere,
And in itself so find a just reward.

7.
And thus a love, made from a worthy choice,
Will to that union come, as but one voice,
Shall speak, one thought but think the other's will,
And while, but frailty, they can know no ill,
Their souls more than their bodies must rejoice.
Platonick Love.

8.
In which estate nothing can so fulfill
Those heights of pleasure, which their souls instill
Unto each other, but that love thence draws
New Arguments of joy, while the same cause
That makes them happy, makes them greater still.

9.
So that however multiplied and vast
Their love increase, they will not think it past
The bounds of growth, till their exalted fire
Being equally inlarg'd with their desire,
Transform and fix them to one Star at last.

10.
Or when that otherwise they were inclin'd
Unto those publick joys, which are assign'd
To bleffed Souls when they depart from hence,
They would, besides what Heaven doth dispense,
Have their contents they in each other find.
THE IDEA,

MADE OF ALNWICK IN HIS EXPEDITION TO SCOTLAND WITH THE ARMY, 1639.

ALL Beauties vulgar eyes on earth do see,
At best but some Imperfect Copies be
Of those the Heavens did at first decree;

For though th' Ideas of each severall kind
Conceiv'd above by the Eternal Mind
Are such, as none can error in them find,

Since from his thoughts and presence he doth bar
And shut out all deformity so far,
That the least beauty near him is a Star.

As Nature yet from far th' Ideas views,
And doth besides but vile materials choose,
We in her works observe no small abuse.

Some of her figures therefore foil'd and blurr'd,
Show as if Heaven had no way concurred
In shapes so disproportion'd and absurd.

109
The Idea.

Which being again vex'd with some hate and spite
That doth in them vengeance and rage excite,
Seem to be tortur'd and deformed quite.

While so being fixt, they yet in them contain
Another sort of ugliness and stain,
Being with old wrinkles interlin'd again.

Lastly, as if Nature ev'n did not know
What colour every sev'ral part should owe,
They look as if their Galls would overflow.

Fair is the Mark of Good, and Foul, of ill,
Although not so infallibly, but still
The proof depends most on the mind and will.

As Good yet rarely in the Foul is met,
So 'twould as little by its union get,
As a rich Jewel that were poorly set.

For since Good first did at the Fair begin,
Foul being but a punishment for sin,
Fair's the true outside to the Good within.

In these the Supreme Pow'r then so doth guide
Nature's weak hand, as he doth add beside
All by which Creatures can be dignified,
The Idea.

While you in them see so exact a line,
That through each sev'ral parts a glimpse doth shine
Of their original and form divine.

Therefore the characters of fair and good
Are so set forth, and printed in their blood,
As each in other may be understood.

That Beauty so accompanied with Grace,
And equally conspicuous in the face,
In a fair Woman's outside takes the place.

Thus while in her all rare perfection meets,
Each, as with Joy, its fellow beauty greets,
And varies so into a thousand sweets.

Or if some tempting thought do so assault
As doubtful she 'twixt two opinions halt,
A gentle blush corrects and mends the fault.

That so she still fairer, and better grows,
Without that thus she more to passion owes
Than what fresh colour on her cheeks bestows.

To which again her lips such helps can add
As both will chase all grievous thoughts and sad,
And give what else can make her good or glad.
As Statuaries, yet having fram'd in Clay
An hollow image, afterwards convey
The molten metal through each several way,

But when it once unto its place hath past,
And th' inward Statua perfectly is cast,
Do throw away the outward Clay at last.

So when that form the Heavns at first decreed
Is finished within, Souls do not need
Their Bodies more, but would from them be freed.

For who still cover'd with their earth would lie?
Who would not shake their fetters off and fly,
And be at least, next to a Deity?

However then you be most lovely here,
Yet, when you from all Elements are clear,
You far more pure and glorious shall appear.

Thus from above I doubt not to behold
Your second self renew'd in your own mold,
And rising thence fairer then can be told.

From whence ascending to the Elect and Blest
In your true Joys you will not find it least
That I in Heav'n shall know, and love you best.
The Idea.

For while I do your coming there attend,
I shall much time on your Idea spend,
And note how far you all others transcend.

And thus, though you more than an angel be,
Since being here to Sin and Mischief free,
You will have rais'd your self to their degree,

That so, victorious over Death and Fate,
And happy in your everlasting state,
You shall triumphant enter Heaven gate.

Hasten not thither yet, for as you are
A Beauty upon Earth without compare,
You will shew best still where you are most rare.

Live all our lives then; If the picture can
Here entertain a loving absent Man,
Much more the Idea whence you first began.
DISCONSOLATE and sad,
So little hope of remedy I find
That when my matchless Mistress were inclin'd
To pity me, 'twould scarcely make me glad,
The discomposing of so fair a mind
Being that which would to my Afflictions add.

For when she should repent,
This Act of Charity had made her part
With such a precious Jewel as her Heart,
Might she not grieve that e'er she did relent?
And then were it fit I felt the smart
Until I grew the greatest penitent.

Nor were't a good excuse,
When she pleas'd to call for her Heart again,
To tell her of my suffering and pain,
Since that I should her Clemency abuse,
While she did see what wrong she did sustain,
In giving what she justly might refuse.
Platonick Love.

Vex'd thus with me at last,
When from her kind restraint she now were gone,
And I left to the Manacles alone,
Should I not on another Rock be cast?
Since they who have not yet content, do moan
Far less than they whose hope thereof is past?

Besides I would deserve,
And not live poorly on the alms of Love,
Or claim a favour did not singly move
From my regard: if she her joys reserve
Unto some other, she at length should prove,
Rather than beg her pity I would starve.

Let her then be serene,
Alike exempt from pity and from hate,
Let her still keep her dignity and state,
Yet from her glories something I shall glean,
For when she doth them everywhere dilate
A beam or two to me must intervene.

And this shall me sustain,
For though due merit I cannot express,
Yet she shall know none ever lov'd for less
Or easier reward. Let her remain
Still great and good, and from her Happiness
My chief contentment I will entertain.
Platonick Love.

Restrained hopes, though you dare not aspire
To fly an even pitch with my desire,
Yet fall no lower, and at least take heed
That you no way unto despair proceed,
Since in what form so’er you keep entire
I shall the less all other comforts need.

I know how much presumption did transcend,
When that affection could at most pretend
To be believ’d, would needs yet higher soar
And love a Beauty which I should adore,
Though yet therein I had no other end,
But to assure that none could love her more.

Only may she not think her beauty less
That on low objects it doth still express
An equal force, while it doth rule all hearts
Alike in the remotest as nearest parts,
Since if it did at any distance cease
It wanted of that pow’r it should impart.

Small earthly lights but to some space extend,
And then unto the dim and dark do tend,
And common heat doth at some length stop
That it cannot so much as warm one drop,
While light and heat that doth from Heav’n descend
Warms the low Valley more than the Mountain top.
Platonick Love.

Nor do they always best of the Heav'ns deserve,
Who gaze on't most, but they who do reserve
Themselves to know it, since not all that will Climb up into a Steeple or a Hill
So well its pow'r and influence observe,
As they who study and remark it still.

Would she then in full glory on me shine,
An Image of that Light which is divine,
I then should see more clear, while she did draw
Me upwards, and the vapors twixt us awe.
To open her eyes, were to open mine,
And teach her wonders which I never saw.

Nor would there thus be any cause to fear,
That while her pow'r attractive drew me near,
The odds betwixt us would the lesser show,
Since the most common Understandings know
That inequalities still most appear,
When brought together and composed so.

As there is nothing yet doth so excell,
But there is found, if not its parallel,
Yet something so conform, as though far least
May yet obtain therein an Interest,
Why may not faith and truth then join so well
As they may suit her rare perfections best?
Then, hope, sustain thy self; though thou art hid
Thou livest still, and must till she forbid;
For when she would my vows and love reject,
They would a Being in themselves project,
Since infinites as they, yet never did,
Nor could conclude without some good effect.
A MEDITATION

UPON HIS WAX-CANDLE BURNING OUT.

WHILE thy ambitious flame doth strive for height,
    Yet burneth down as clogged with the weight
Of earthly parts, to which thou art combin'd,
Thou still dost grow more short of thy desire,
And dost in vain unto that place aspire
    To which thy native powers seem inclin'd.

Yet when at last thou com'st to be dissolv'd,
And to thy proper principles resolv'd,
    And all that made thee now is decompos'd,
Though all thy terrestial part in ashes lies,
Thy more sublime to higher Regions flies,
    The rest being to the middle ways expos'd.

And while thou doest thy self each where disperse
Some parts of thee make up this Universe,
    Others a kind of dignity obtain,
Since thy pure Wax, in its own flame consum'd,
Volumes of incense sends, in which perfum'd
    Thy smoak mounts where thy fire could not attain.
A Meditation.

More more our Souls then, when they go from hence, And back unto the Elements dispense,
All that built up our frail and earthly frame Shall through each pore and passage make their breach, Till they with all their faculties do reach Unto that place from whence at first they came.

Nor need they fear thus to be thought unkind To those poor Carcasses they leave behind, Since being in unequal parts commix'd Each in his Element their place will get; And who thought Elements unhappy yet As long as they were in their stations fix'd?

Or if they sally forth, is there not light And heat in some, and spirit prone to fight? Keep they not in Earth and Air the field? Besides, have they not pow'r to generate When more than Meteors they Stars* create, Which while they last, scarce to the brightest yield?

That so in them we more than once may live, While these materials which here did give Our bodies essence, and are most of use, Quick'ned again by the world's common soul, Which in it self and in each part is whole, Can various forms in divers kinds produce.

* In the Constellation of Cassiopeia, 1572.

120
If, then, at worst, this our condition be
When to themselves the Elements are free,
   And each doth to its proper place revert,
What may we not hope from our part divine
Which can this dross of Elements refine
   And them unto a better state assert?

Or if as clods upon this earthly stage,
Which represents nothing but change or age,
   Our souls would all their burdens here divest,
They singly may that glorious state acquire,
Which fills alone their infinite desire
   To be of perfect happiness possest.

And therefore I who do not live and move
By outward sense so much as faith and love,
   Which is not in inferior Creatures found,
May unto some immortal state pretend,
Since by these wings I thither may ascend
   Where faithful loving Souls with joys are crown'd

121
OCTOBER 14, 1664.

ENRAGING Grieves, though you most divers be,
   In your first causes you may yet agree
To take an equal share within my heart,
Since, if each grief strive for the greatest part,
You needs must vex yourselves as well as me.

For your own fakes and mine then make an end.
In vain you do about a Heart contend,
Which, though it seem in greatness to dilate,
Is but a tumor, which in this its state
The choiceft remedies would but offend.

Then storm't at once. I neither feel constraint,
Scorning your worst, nor suffer any taint,
Dying by multitudes, though if you strive,
I fear my heart may thus be kept alive,
Until it under its own burden faint.

122
October 14, 1664.

What isn't not done? Why then my God, I find,
Would have me use you to reform my mind,
Since through his help I may from you extract
An essence pure, so spriteful and compact
As it will be from grosser parts refine'd.

Which being again converted by his grace
To godly sorrow, I may both efface
Those sins first caus'd you, and together have
Your pow'r to kill turn'd to a pow'r to save,
And bring my Soul to its desired place.
IN STATUAM LIGNEAM OVERBURII.

CERNIS Overburi, non ære aut marmore, vultum
Sed Ligno Hiberno dic, age, nonne placet?

---

DE C. DE S.

HÆC anima, ut fuerit terrena libera mole,
Venerit et summo conspicienda Deo,
Talibus et tantis vitis spurcata, trahetur,
Haud dubium, ad poenam suppliciumque grave.
Viderit: at pulchrum dabitur cum fumere corpus,
Eximium, credo, perdere nollet opus.
EPITAPHIUM IN ANAGRAMMA NOMINIS SUI, REDDOR UT HERBÆ.

QUAS turgens flos mane decet, quas aruit omnes
Una dies, quas morte cita, nova vita sequetur,
Non unquam moritura tamen, sic Reddor ut Herbæ.

EPITAPH.
IN SE ROMÆ FACTUM 1615.

VEROS ceu varios populi ridere timores
Expertus, vitae melioris conscius, intus
Plaudebam, expectans faceret dum fabula finem.
IN TUMULUM DOMINI FRANCISCI VERE.

ANGUSTUS nimis est lapis pusillus,
   Vel, totum, foret ipsa terra, marmor;
Angusta et spolia et Trophæa fícta,
Hæc Belgæ tulerant, vel illa Iberi.
Cuncta angusta nimis videntur illi,
Qui victor toties mori volebat,
In se post alios, agens triumphum,
Ut dignum tumulum, Trophæa digna
Uni nil poterit referre vero.
Ni forte, ut maneat perenne nomen
Cui mundus spolia, et caro triumphus,
Cælum fit Tumulus, Trophæa stellæ.
IN DIEM NATALITIUM,
VIZ. 3 MAR.

VERE novo lux usque redit quæ nascor, at una
Dum tempus redit, et fit numerosa dies,
Ver olim vires renovans, roburque recondens
Ætas fit tandem, tristis hyemisque mihi.

FOR A DIAL.

DISCURRENS dubiæ, placidus compendia vitæ,
Excipiens tacito gaudia tuta finu,
Præteritis lætare bonis, nec fæva futuri
Exagitet miseros cura premave dies.

Omnis in adversum ruit hora, volatque retrorsum
Et velut exhorrens jam peritura fugit.
Dum numerans delet, dumque addens subtrahit, illa,
Quæ vitæ ratio, calculus atque tuae.
IN ANSWER TO THE VERSES OF QUIET
FOR THE PUCELLE D'ORLEANS, QUASI EXTEMPORE.

QUOD nequiere viri, potuit si foemina, quid ni
Galle, fores tandem tu muliere minor?
Define, Galle, tuam tandem jactare Bubulcam,
Seu Medæa fuit, five Medusa fuit.
Si canit ad Bellum, tamen est Medæa vocanda,
Carmina dum rauro concinit illa sono.
Hostes si caesi, tamen est dicenda Medusa,
Dum nimis ad diræ virginis ora rigent.
Virgo fit tandem sed qualem nollet adulter,
Seu Medæa fuit, five Medusa fuit.
Definat ergo suam Gallus jaetare Johanna,
Saltem plena suo non erit illa Deo.
Plena suo vel nulla datur, vel Papa Johanna,
Numine; fit virgo quam licet illa minus.
IN ANSWER TO TILENUS
WHEN I HAD THAT FATAL DEFLUXION
IN MY HAND.

QUI possim Phœbum succensum credere?
Laudes
Quum facit ut scribas, Docte Tilene, meas.
Providus atque manum consulto surripit istam
Ut melius possem nunc superesse tua.

DE HUGONE GROTIO,
ARCA INCLUSO ET A CARCERE LIBERATO.

CARCERE dum Carcer victus, Tenebrisque Tenebræ
Vinclis cum demum vincla soluta tibi
Profiliens medià tandem de mole, videris
Quidquid mortale est, deposuiisse simul.
PRO LAUREATO POETA.

AT quorsum Juvenis, si nullo limine clausus,
Immiftus canibus, sultaque vagatus in omni
Præcipites crebris damas latratibus urgens
Excurrit, secumque nihil non perdere tentat?
An mage grata viri tandem maturior ætas?
Qui furiis agitatus, atrox, atque omne tristi
Horrida funefsis meditatur prælia campis?
In propriam speciemque ruens ita sanguine gaudet
Conièius fatis, ut nullus sibi concidat hostis.
Is potiorne domi qui futilis ambit honorem,
Inque leves populi gyros proelivis et auram,
Mercatur voces, falsâque cupidine træctus,
Incertam dubii sectatur nominis umbram?
Heu fugias qui te fugiunt, et ferre recusant
Imperium falsæque tuos, quibus undique faustis
Candida supremos designant colla triumphos.
Sed ne nulla tibi demum victoria consuet,
En prædam, formosa, tuam, quam porrigit herba,
Et genua amplectens, seferul tro dedere victam
Teætatur, lauroque suâ tua tempora cingit.
Pro Laureato Poeta.

Nec canos caufere meos (qui fymbola certa
Sunt fidei), tantâ folitum flammâve tremorem,
Immo nec errones tanquam, fed lumina fixa
Contemplare oculos tandem, neque basia spernas
Floridus ut defit color ori, fervat odorem,
Æmula pastillis spirabunt labra rosatis
Basia, mellito et fe lingua madore resolvet.
Denique feu noftrro latitet nova pruna colore,
Niætet et impexus torvo sub lumine cautus
Arcitenens, mortis tandem feu scena futurae
Prodierim, vitam nobis dum dura negaris;
Ah! reedas faltem, nondum fatis arfit Amorem,
Cui fenium tempusve fidem cui prærpitét ullam.
AD SERENISS. REGEM GUSTAVUM,
A.D. 1631.

PER varios terræ tractus & diffita Regna,
Inclyte Suecorum princeps, dum castra movere
Constituis, pacemque pio decernere bello,
Quæ te securum probitas, prudentia fortæm,
Felicem virtut præstat, non omine vano
Fecit, ut antiquum Germania libera nomen
Accipiens rursus fe justo vindice tandem
Gaudeat, inque tuos succedat sponte triumphos.
Scilicet hoc potuit tua dextera fortís & ultrix,
Igneus atque vigor bello famiatus, & ensis
Quo strīcto late rutilanteque, fulgidus hostes
Irruis in medios, denfam passimque caternam
Discutis, & longe percellis quæque timore,
Ut tibi nec fumi nubes glomerata, nec imo
Excussus pulvis, pila nec confertior instans
Obscurare tuos validos, vel fletere, gressus
Possint, è multo quin numine flamma coruscans
Perstringenque oculos, insultus reddat inanes.
Ad Sereniss. Regem Gustavum.

Militis, innocuosque iactus, ac irrita tela,
Dum tibi lustratæ cæcae patuere tenebræ,
Inque tuam lucem caligo cedere visa est.
Inde citata tuum sequitur victoria cursum,
Inque gradus hæret certos figitque trophæa,
Auspiciisque tuis illustrior explicat alas;
Queis sursum vecto, superas invisere sedes,
Inque novum tandem liceat tibi fidus abire
Clarius Aréturi, et fuscae jubar addere luci.
EURYALE MOERENS.

DEPRESSÆ valles piceis irriguæ fontibus,
Herbe marcidæ, cæca prætexentes Barathra,
Maligni colles hirsutis vepribus obsiti,
Aspera montium juga, exefis hiulca specubus,
Defrugatarum segetum late patentia æquora,
Invita Soli antra, confragosa præcipitia,
Abruptarum cautium mutantia undique cacumina,
Pendulae taxi, cupressis succrescentes feralibus,
Spæorum inferna ducentium horrores sacri,
Infauitæ stryges, bubulantia stygiae avis omina,
Rauci strictores, torvorum colla anguium fibila,
Prodigialium monstorum exerta passim capita,
Aspectus truces siderum, diri portenta ætheris,
Vosque gementes umbræ, hic testari liceat,
Nihil uspiam fuisse Euryale tristiæ.

1632
MENSA LUSORIA;
OR, A SHOVEL-BOARD-TABLE TO MR. MASTER.*

ROBORIS excelsi tabulatum sternitur ingens,
Æquore producunt levi, quod tramite recto
Procurrens, tandem quæ se subducit in imum
Difsecat exilis transversim linea, scena
Unde patet ludi, commissò margine clausa,
Qui bini ternive notam certantibus aptat
Figetur extremo, feu pressus limite jaétus,
Seu tremulus nutat, fibi nec confìtare videtur.
Hic ubi conveniunt lusores, quisque monetam
Argento cufam, disci formâque nitentem
Librat in adverlam, quæ ducitur orbita, partem
Perpetuo jaétu, sed quæ, si forte feratur
Plus juusto, cadit in favam, quæ limine summo
Cernitur, at citra septum si tarda latificit,
Rejicitur jaétus, totus sit & irritus inde.
Ait intra juftam datur ut confístere metam
Promovet hic jaétum, promotum dimovet ille.
Adjicit hic alien, sed quem depellere tentat
Nonnullus; Nummos hic obfiët, impetit ille,
Obliquo Curfu: Multæ cadit ifte ruinà,
Dum complexa suo funduntur singula nexu,
Et variata vices rerum fors undique verfat.
Ludere sic liceat manibus, sic ludere musà,
A studiis fessi quam jam deceffimus ambo.

* Thomas Master, "esteemed," says Anthony Wood, "as a vast scholar, a general artist and linguist, a noted poet, and a most florid preacher," was a senior student of Christ Church. He assisted Herbert in collecting materials for the History of Henry VIII. He died in 1643.
CHARISSIMO, DOCTISSIMO,
JUCUNDISSIMOQUE JUXTIM AMICO
THOMÆ MASTER.

Hoc Epitaph. mærens P. C. E. B. Herbert de Cherbury, 1643.

QUI sis vel fueras, Amate Master,
Lectorem satis hæc docere possunt;—
Quod terris fuit ut molesta vita,
Te dempto, mage sit molesta longe,
Quod Cœlum fuit ut beata fedes,
Auctum te, mage sit beata fedes.
In terris quid agis fide vacillans?
Si vita probus es, fruere, Lecto,
Cœlo jam solito beatiore,
Master jam reliquis alacriore.
Vivat in æternum virtus ac diffita terræ
Luftret, ubique gravi sub Religione refurgens.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>LOAN PERIOD</th>
<th>1</th>
<th>2</th>
<th>3</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>HOME USE</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ALL BOOKS MAY BE RECALLED AFTER 7 DAYS

1-month loans may be renewed by calling 642-3405
6-month loans may be recharged by bringing books to Circulation Desk
Renewals and recharges may be made 4 days prior to due date

DUE AS STAMPED BELOW

---

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY
FORM NO. DD6, 60m, 11/78

BERKELEY, CA 94720